AN ADVENTURESS.

The Latest Explanation of the Sartoris-Bush Scandal.

Mr. Sartoris Reported to be a Heavy Loser as the Result of the Escapade—The Lady Leaves for New York—A Talk with Sartoris and with Mrs. Bush.

CHICAGO, June 30. — Interest in the scandal involving the names of Mr. Algernon Sartoris and Mrs. Bush has been much increased by the curious conduct of the parties themselves. Mr. Sartoris' first statement was to the effect that he did not know Mrs. Bush at all, that in fact he had never heard of such a person. This curious statement was published, along with an interview with the lady, in which she told how she had known Mr. Sartoris in England, was well acquainted with his wife, and that he had often visited her house in Milwaukee, in fact was a very regular caller. Mr. Sartoris, in this first denial, has done more to feed the gossip about the matter than anybody else. He arrived in Chicago on Thursday morning. He circled around from place to place, and, although he sent his baggage to the Palmer house and patronized the wash-rooms, he did not settle anywhere definitely. Then he communicated with

THE HEROINE OF THE STORY.

Mrs. Bush remained at the Tremont house up to 10 a. m. on the same day. At that hour she received a telegram from Sartoris, and immediately after took a coupe and was driven away. The lady returned so soon that it was surmised that she had been disappointed in meeting Mr. Sartoris, and this was confirmed by other facts. She refused to see anybody during the day, but a reporter, who had followed his card up to her room, had in the afternoon. The lady was standing with her arms resting upon the door. She was en dishabille, her dress consisting of a lounging wrapper, fitting in loose folds, which exposed her well-rounded form and the least bit of a neck of alabaster whiteness and purity. As the reporter advanced she involuntarily raised her arms in an effusion of womanly modesty to conceal the slight exposure.

A SHORT TALK WITH HER

"Oh," she exclaimed, "I cannot possibly see you now. Please excuse me. Won't you?"

"I do hope you will pardon me for the intrusion," he replied, "but such a remarkable story was published this morning from Mr. Sartoris. He says that he does not know you and never heard of you."

The lady's face flushed a deep scarlet as she answered:

"I cannot believe that Mr. Sartoris said that. It is all a mistake, oh! such a terrible mistake. Mr. Sartoris says he does not know me? Oh, no, he never could have uttered those words." Her tones were those of definite assurance and injured pride. She ran on for several sentences in the same style. "Indeed, it is a mistake. Mr. Sartoris knows me well. I told you last night how I met him. But he will be here to-morrow and also my husband, and this awful misapprehension will be finally cleared up."

"You do not mean to say that you are unaware Mr. Sartoris is now in Chicago?"

"Mr. Sartoris is in Chicago? Oh, how glad I am." She dropped her hand from her breast in the enthusiasm of a real or pretended ecstacy at the discovery.

"Have you received no letter from him?"

"None whatever," she answered promptly, and the reporter was awfully puzzled. He knew definitely that she had, and he wondered at the marvelous power of acting which stood her in so great stead.

"And you do not expect to meet him to-day?"

"I do not expect to meet him until to-morrow."

Mr. Sartoris remained about town all day, but avoided all his acquaintances. Late in the afternoon he appeared at the office of the attorneys for the Cream City furniture company and the Fox Brothers, both of whom had attached Mrs. Bush's furniture at the Northwestern railroad depot. He held a long consultation,

COMPROMISED THE MATTER

in some way and again disappeared. This was strange, considering his statement that he had never heard of Mrs. Bush. But stranger things followed. At seven p. m. on the same day, Thursday, a two-horse coupe, driven by a prudent and trustful-appearing man, drew up at the ladies' entrance to the Tremont. The colored man who attends the door advanced to meet the vehicle, and the driver handed him a blue slip of paper, on which was written, in Algernon Sartoris' hand: "Mrs. A. Bush, Tremont house." The colored porter went up to Mrs. Bush's room and knocked on the door. The portal was opened by the blonde lady herself. She was in traveling dress, and all equipped to go out, which was rather strange after she had distinctly told a reporter that she had received no message from Mr. Sartoris, and that she did not expect him. At any rate, she was dressed in sufficient wrappings for a drive in chilly weather. The colored gentleman told her there was a carriage at the door. She expressed no surprise, and in a few moments descended in the elevator. The carriage was one of Leroy Payne's. The coachman had his instructions, for

HE NODDED TO MRS. BUSH,

and she returned the nod. She entered the carriage and wrapped around her face a thin gauze veil. The colored man assisted her to enter, and as he did so asked her where she wished to go. He understood her to say 256 Madison street, but he does not remember exactly whether that was the number or not. He gave it to the driver; that worthy nodded, and reaching down handed Mrs. Bush a note. Then he whipped up his horses and they disappeared down Lake street, the colored man watching the vehicle as far as La Salle street, when it disappeared from view. That was the last seen of Mrs. Bush at the Tremont house. She had not returned up to 2:30 o'clock on the same morning. One of Payne's carriages had not returned to the stables at the same time. The hotel clerks waited up in a fermentor anxiety until 2 o'clock, and the question discussed among them was whether the handsome blonde lady had left finally, or whether she had gone to meet Sartoris, and they were both spending the night at some friend's house. The porter says he understood Mrs. Bush to say to the coachman, "Mrs. Dr. Buckingham," but there is no Mrs. Dr. Buckingham in the directory, and No. 256 Madison street is Wells & Co., a wholesale house, and No. 256 West Madison street is a cigar store. The porter is therefore either mistaken or the words were dropped as a blind, which would show that the coachman and Mrs. Bush had a perfect understanding between them. There is no doubt that the blue strip of paper, marked "Mrs. A. Bush, Tremont house," was in Sartoris' hand-writing. It was compared with his signature on the Tremont house register, May 4th, 1883, letter by letter, and it agreed in all details.

AN INTERVIEW WITH SARTORIS.

Mr. Sartoris was caught by another reporter on the same afternoon. He talked as follows, in direct contradiction to his former statement, that he never heard of Mrs. Bush:

"Been looking for me?" said the young Englishman, lazily. "I'm not in hiding; my luggage is at the Palmer house."

"The facts of the Milwaukee affair?" he said, echoing the question of the reporter. "There are no facts to conceal that I know of."

"Were you a frequent visitor upon Mrs. Bush at Milwaukee," asked the reporter.

"I was a visitor," said Sartoris with apparent indifference. "I don't know whether you'd call it a frequent visitor or not. I've known Mrs. Bush and her husband for a long while. I crossed the ocean with them and with the lady's brother three months ago. When the lady and her husband went west she stopped at Milwaukee, while Mr. Bush went on to Manistique, where he went into the fishery business until he lost his money. I stopped off a number of times at Milwaukee during my moving to and fro between Green Bay and Chicago. I called upon Mrs. Bush. I can see no harm. I never knew the lady to be alone. Either her brother or her husband was with her."

The Englishman gave this recital of his connection with the lady nonchalantly. He was evidently less stirred up over what people were thinking of him than they were.

"How do you come to be in Chicago now?"

"Just as soon as I saw the insinuations I hurried here to take action in regard to them. I telegraphed to Mr. Bush and Mrs. Bush's brother."

"When will they be here?"

"The husband will be here to-morrow forenoon. The brother the next day."

"Mr. Sartoris, was the Bush establishment at Milwaukee supported by you?"

"No, sir," answered the Englishman, savagely. "I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bush perhaps on a half-dozen occasions. That is no reason why I should be blackguarded. I think—well, I won't talk further on this unpleasant subject."

"Were you not in company with Mrs. Bush at the Tremont house in April or May last?"

"No, sir," growled Sartoris. "I'll answer no other questions," and he moved off with a stride that betokened his wrathful state of mind.

Dr. Monmonier, whom Mrs. Bush claimed as a cousin, has been interviewed at Baltimore, Md., and he states that he never knew her.

MRS. SARTORIS

has been stopping at Long Branch, but she spent most of her time lately at her father's home in New York.

A CLEVER ADVENTURESS.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 30.—Mrs. Bush, the heroine of the Sartoris scandal, left suddenly for New York last night. Sartoris is represented to be in seclusion with friends and will return this evening to Green Bay. His baggage is still at the Palmer House. The impression is general that the woman is a clever adventuress and courted publicity for the purpose of bringing Sartoris to terms, and that he has had to pay dear for his acquaintance with her. Many stories are related of her queer conduct on prior visits to Chicago.

THE GATEWAY.

Seneca, Newton County, Mo.—A Sketch of the Year's Progress.

A Rich and Extensive Tributary Trade—Mercantile and Manufacturing Chat.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

SENECA, June 27.—Whenever chance or business leads us into a town or city, and we see around us ample evidences of the spirit of progress in large and well-stocked stores and solid, substantial improvements, we always think, if we do not say it, "There are good reasons for this thrifty appearance of things."

Arriving in the little village of Seneca, so handsomely located, guarded, as it were, by the semicircle of hills surrounding it, and noting as we did the various efforts being put forth to beautify the surroundings, and thus enhance the value of the property, we immediately began to tap the font of knowledge in the vicinity—i. e., the men who, by their ability and energy, have kept up the prosperity of the community—and we found many good causes, many cogent reasons for past improvement, present prosperity and probable advancement.

Our attention was called first to the handsome mill building, and upon further examination, found the Seneca roller mills, finished in November, 1882, and built at a cost of $33,000, as complete in every particular as any flouring mill in the United States, although of smaller capacity. It is equipped with eight complete double set rollers, middlings purifiers, and all of the latest improved machinery. The capacity is 150 barrels flour per day, and the company do an entire merchant business, shipping largely to St. Louis and Texas, and have shipped eight car loads to New York City.

The proprietors of this magnificent mill, especially Mr. Chas. Huber of St. Louis (one of them), deserve the credit of introducing the Hungarian process of making flour in America, and every miller recognizes the value it has been to our great wheat and flour producing country. The firm will build, near the mill, a 30,000 bushel elevator this season.

This company of enterprising gentlemen have purchased 2,400 acres near Seneca and will have a large stock ranch of sheep, cattle and hogs, using only good grades and pure blood stock.

The question arises why this location was selected, and to those who read our Newton county correspondence it will be partly answered. Seneca is located upon the very margin of drawing trade from it to the distance of forty miles, about the same south into McDonald county, which furnishes an abundance of free and rich natural pasturage, and north and east ten to twelve miles in a more thickly-settled country. The various tribes buying and selling here are the Senecas, Wyandottes, Shawnees, Modocs Miamis, Peorias, Quapaws and from west of Grand river, the Cherokees, the commercial business for the last year being between $400,000 and $500,000. At least 100,000 bushels of wheat was marketed here last season and there will be more this. The shipments of hogs and cattle have been important and there is a constant improvement in grade. Range in the Nation is free unless herded and many parties buy a small farm near the line, then give their stock free and unlimited range, where they are perfectly safe and require no herder.

Besides the roller miller is the Seneca mill, one of the oldest in the country, with three run; a custom and merchant trade, the latter principally with Vinita and the Lost Creek flouring mill, two and a half miles northeast, also a three run mill, but run by a very fair water power.

We noted that the population is from all the states and Canada, with a few Hungarians. The national census enumerated 483; a state census only completed recently 813, a growth of nearly 100 per cent.

There is one church with four denominations using it: a flourishing Union Sunday-school, well established societies, a very creditable weekly newspaper, the Dispatch, printed at home; and there has been important improvements made in their school facilities—the school is of four grades, with good frame building and 200 attendance.

A HANDSOME NEW HOTEL

is their latest improvement, which will be opened about the time you open this paper. It is built on the site of the "Phœnix," which was burned, and is a finely arranged, handsome appearing frame, 48x24, with an L 48x22. It will be well kept, and an addition to the town. We were told that $60,000 would not cover the improvements in Seneca during the year past, and our attention attracted to the extreme feasibility of a north and south railroad to cross here and run down, tapping the rich country to the south.

There seems to be good openings existing in Seneca for a large wagon factory, to supply the immense trade south and southwest; a plow factory; a woolen mill; a fruit evaporator or canning works, for fruit is abundant. We learned that several Hungarians from the "land of the vine" expected to locate upon the side hills, and add wine to the flow of milk and honey. Before closing we will refer briefly to

CHA-PE-KAH SPRING,

"Medicine water" in the Shawnee tongue. It is located just over the line, about one-half mile from the city. A few hundred dollars would do much to beautify and popularize it. The medicinal properties of the water had been tested first by the Indians, who depend so largely upon nature's physician, and later some remarkable cures have been effected among residents.

Seneca is well located, having ready access east and south by the St. Louis and San Francisco railway, which connects at Vinita with the Missouri Pacific system to all parts of the world—and Texas. But it is the activity and energy of the business-men to which the town owes most of its prosperity.

Adieu! we are off for Texas.

BUTLER AND THE LEGISLATURE.

He Declares It Shall Not Reassemble Without His Consent.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

BOSTON, June 30.—For some days the kind of reception which the joint committee on prorogation of the legislature would receive from Gov. Butler, has been a subject of speculation chiefly because those who pretend to know the purpose of the governor have intimated that he would severely snub the committee if nothing more. When Senator Hale to-day informed the governor of the object of the call the governor called for the order on which the committee had been appointed. This order asks the governor to prorogue the legislature until August 27, for the sole purpose of considering the report of the committee on charities on the Tewksbury investigation.

"Has the legislature acted upon all matters before it?" asked the governor.

"It has," replied Senator Hale. "This is the only matter remaining."

The governor then said that the occasion to

CALL THE LEGISLATURE TOGETHER

must be one of great importance and, as at present advised, he did not think that the report of the Tewksbury investigation would demand legislative action. In fact he could not see what there was for the legislature to do. The Marshes had been got rid of and that was the main evil at Tewksbury. Whatever else there was to remedy could not be done by legislation. The governor, he said, was so connected with the legislative department that the question of prorogation to meet again was one that he had to consider in relation to himself as well as to the legislature. In other words, the veto power made the governor a part of the legislature. He wanted until Monday afternoon to consider the question, when he would give the legislature an answer in writing. Every member of the committee is convinced that the answer will be a refusal to comply with the request of the legislature, and that consequently the delay in giving the answer is unnecessary. In the course of the conversation the governor informed the committee that the legislature could not adjourn without his permission.

"Has it power to assemble in August without your consent?" was asked.

Governor Butler replied that the legislature to reassemble without his consent, and if it did it would have in its session whatever resistance he could offer.

HAD NO POWER

"Would the governor use force to disperse the legislature should it meet in August?" inquired a member who was listening to the account of the interview which one of the committee was giving.

"That is what I think he intended I should understand," was the answer.

BOGUS CHECKS.

A Young Man's Wholesale System of Robbery and Swindling.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Samuel Stern, a young man of good education and pleasing address, son of Mr. Joseph Stern, dealer in clothing and cloths at No. 288 Canal street, was arrested yesterday, charged with having swindled a number of merchants in this city by means of bogus checks. The detectives had been searching for young Stern for several months, and they finally captured him in the Bowery. The first complaint against him was received by the police from Mr. Charles W. Schuman, a jeweler, at No. 24 John street, who reported that Stern had purchased jewelry and diamonds from him to the amount of $650, and had paid for them with a check which subsequently proved to be worthless. From the description given of the swindler, in the above case, it was learned that Stern was the operator in each case. When arrested he was brought to police headquarters, where he was identified by three of his victims. He made to Inspector Byrnes. He said that his father was the senior member of the firm of Joseph Stern & Son, in which store he was employed. He became infatuated with a woman of bad character, and for nearly a year before September, 1882, he had been stealing from his father's store to procure money to lavish on her. He was in the habit of visiting his father's store every Sunday for months, and carrying off with him a roll of cloth, which he disposed of through a third party. In this way he stole probably between $4,000 and $5,000 worth of goods. In September, 1882, he quarreled with his father and left his employ, and since then he has had no regular employment and

A FULL CONFESSION

NO PERMANENT HOME.

Philip Tobias, aged forty-nine, of No. 346 Bowery, was arrested last evening, charged with receiving and disposing of some of the goods stolen by Stern from his father's store, and also portions of the jewelry obtained by him on the bogus checks. An elder brother of Stern was sent to the state prison about ten years ago for grand larceny. On his release he went to Texas, where he now lives.

STILL SEARCHING.

Clue to Miss Slocum's Assailant—Another Lady Attacked.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

PURDY'S POINT, N. Y., June 30.—There has been some new developments in the case of Miss Slocum, of New Salem, who was assaulted and robbed Tuesday while on her way from the school in which she taught to her home. After the assault the negro threatened Miss Slocum's life if she made an outcry, and disappeared in the woods. Search parties were organized and armed with all sorts of weapons. Farmers and farm hands scoured the woods, and in fact the whole of Westchester county, but no trace of the man could be found. A reporter of the World called at the residence of the Slocum family last night, and learned that Mr George Slocum had just returned from Connecticut, having got on the track of the negro who assaulted his sister. This same negro on the Thursday preceding the Tuesday on which had been at Reading, Conn., and there committed a similar assault on an old lady and threatened to shoot her if she made any alarm or even told her husband. He is there known to have come in the direction of North Salem and stopped at several places on the road, and he slept in a barn adjacent to the residence of Ira Wheeler, near the house occupied by the Slocum family. Mr. Wheeler and his family having moved from the place a short time previous. He has not been seen since the time of the assault on Miss Slocum. Both the New York and the Connecticut authorities are on his track, as his name and history are known to them and it is thought he soon will be captured.

ANOTHER ASSAULT.

A few days ago Alice Young, a young dressmaker, while passing along the Ashford road, in the town of Greenburg, near Hartsdale, was overtaken by an ex-convict named George Leviness, she reports that she was assaulted. Leviness escaped to Connecticut and Officer Gillespie, of Dobbs' Ferry, is now working up the case against him. He will probably be brought back and identified by Miss Young within a few days.

HE WILL INVESTIGATE.

Gov. Cleveland on the Cruelties at the Soldiers' Home.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

BUFFALO, June 30.—The attention of Gov. Cleveland, who is visiting Buffalo, was this afternoon called to the sworn statements published in yesterday's World detailing the cruelties charged against the officials of the Soldiers' Home at Bath. Gov. Cleveland said that the charges were very serious, and nothing but a thorough investigation could dispel the cloud hanging about the Home. "If anything wrong is going on in the institution and the trustees cover it up, charges can be made before me and I think the law gives me the power to remove." The governor and the attorney-general are members of the board of trustees ex-officio. At the meeting of the trustees yesterday, Grattan Wheeler, the accusing trustee, was not notified to be present and knew nothing about the meeting. Friends of the management are making herculean efforts to straighten things out. The Grand army men are holding secret meetings to take testimony in the matter.

CLOSING THE SUEZ CANAL.

Traffic Suspended by the Cholera Scare—Strict Quarantine.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 30.—A cable dispatch, dated Port Said, June 29, says: "A rumor prevails this evening that the government has issued such stringent regulations for the control of the canal traffic while cholera prevails that the Suez canal company can no longer transact its business, and has decided to shut off traffic altogether. The local officers only answer by the statement that vessels are passing and any one can see that traffic has not been stopped. They refuse to say what instructions they have or to admit that they have any at all, but that they shall, for the present at least, follow closely the regulations of the Khedive's government, which are stringent enough and which in outline were suggested by the English government officially here. The belief in well-informed circles is that at once or within a few days. When this question was propounded to M. Gravette, the highest canal authority whom your correspondent could reach, he refused to answer it at all. Cholera has closed Port Said tighter than government rules or quarantine laws. Coal and water are not taken here even when crews have to be put on short allowances all the way to Malta. The moment captains learn of the alarming epidemic they refuse to allow any one to approach from the shore, and they get under way with as little loss of time as the somewhat lax local quarantine regulations will permit. Their fear of contagion is, if possible, exceeded by by their fear of losses and delays, resulting from long quarantine at all ports and at points of destination. No vessel can afford to spend twenty-five days at Malta, or shorter periods at more distant points, and run the chances of longer detention should there be any suspicion that they are carrying the contagion. The passengers by the peninsular and Oriental Steamship companies' boats, many of whom have business of the most urgent character, by the danger of being stopped at Brindisi or intermediate stations, or being held at Gravesend within sight of home. Their fear of this is greater than any danger from the contagion. The French Messageries line has given notice that its sixty vessels, making every port on the Mediterranean, will take no transfers or merchandise from points beyond Alexandria unless they have been subject to quarantine, and there is danger that they may apply the same rule to passengers.

THE CANAL HAS BEEN ORDERED CLOSED

ARE ALARMED

The vessels of the French fleet will leave here as soon as possible, and activity on board them to-day indicates preparations for immediate departure. It is not known whether on board the iron-clads Invincible and Labattalle, but that there have been more deaths is probable. Deaths have occurred in the town, but details cannot be procured, the government having taken strict precautions.

Swindling in Tobacco.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 30.—It has been reported that a firm of tobacco merchants in Philadelphia has been guilty of using labels of other firms for the purpose of selling inferior grades of tobacco. The principal sufferer has been the firm of P. Lorillard & Co., of this city, their tags having been most used on plug tobacco. Proceedings have been taken to have the practice stopped, and criminal actions will be begun in the courts.

The Lily Goes to Australia.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Morris Greenwall of Melbourne, Australia, has concluded arrangements with Mrs. Langtry for a sixteen weeks engagement at a weekly salary of £500. She will open in Melbourne in July, 1884. Mrs. Langtry will sail from San Francisco for Australia in either May or June next.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

THE NEWS VIA WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30.—Information was received here that Elam and Bierne fought early this morning in the woods near New Hope, Augusta county, Va. At the first shot neither were touched. Bierne demanded a second shot. At the second fire Elam received a flesh wound in the thigh. Bierne's second then declared his principal satisfied and the affair was then declared ended. Elam and Bierne will return to their homes at once. Elam's wound is not considered dangerous.

LATER DETAILS.

STAUNTON, VA., June 30.—It is impossible at this time to gather the minute details of the duel. Elam has been concealed not many miles from the scene of the combat for several days past. He was at the residence of John Lewis, a son of Hon. H. J. Lewis. The arrangements for the meeting were matured in Richmond at the time when Elam was in this vicinity and Beirne in West Virginia. Some point about midway between the two places was fixed as the place. A change of seconds was made and the cartel as previously determined, namely, Colt's sixes at eight paces, was agreed upon. Both principals managed to evade the vigilance of the authorities and at six o'clock this morning met in a strip of woods about two miles from Waynesboro, the junction of the Shenandoah Valley and C. & O. R. R. The distance was marked off and at the first fire neither of the men were struck. Beirne, the challenger, demanded a second shot, which was granted and a bullet from his pistol imbedded itself in the upper part of Elam's right thigh. Beirne was untouched. Elam fell to the ground, and Beirne, raising his hat to his fallen opponent, was hurried into a carriage and driven rapidly away. Subsequently he took the train at Crimosa. Elam was also conveyed in a carriage to a house near. His surgeon attends him. It was found that the extraction of the ball would be attended with danger, and a consultation among the surgeons was held. The fact that the ball failed to force itself through is taken as evidence in connection with the character of the weapon used, and the distance, that it came in direct contact with one of the large bones. No arrests have been made, nor does there seem to be any disposition to institute a legal investigation. Elam was removed to the residence of Jno. F. Lewis and his wife sent for.

During the pendancy of the trial, the Reading road is forbidden to collect or receive any money of the Central.

The Hill Investigation.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—In the Hill investigation John McArthur, architect in charge of the Philadelphia public building, was asked his opinion as an expert whether it cost more to complete the Philadelphia building under the modified contract than it would have cost under the 15 per cent contract. Objection was made, and an argument ensued. Finally the witness was permitted to answer, and said the work under a modified contract was inferior in quality to that performed under the 15 per cent contract.

The witness thought ten per cent would be a fair estimate as to superiority of the work under the fifteen per cent contract.

Bartlett, Robbins & Co.'s case was then taken up, and Gen. Stinemetz resumed the analysis of the charges of Bartlett, Robbins & Co. for extra work upon the New York post-office. The examination of Stinemetz upon this branch of the case was concluded and the committee adjourned till Monday, when Stinemetz will be cross-examined.

The Kellogg Case.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—In the criminal court this morning argument was heard upon the pleas in abatement entered in the case of ex-Senator Kellogg. Bliss, for the government, raised objections in substance that the plea was a proper matter for a motion to quash, and not for a plea in abatement. The court seemed disposed to adopt this view. Still Wilson, counsel for Kellogg, insisted upon a ruling upon the pleas as submitted, reserving a right to make the same matter the ground for a motion to quash. Argument was then heard upon the pleas separately.

DRAMSHOP LICENSES.

The President of the Council Talks About the McNeary Case.

The point raised yesterday in the McNeary case that the municipal assembly had no power to delegate the authority which descended to it as the successor of the county court to be the sole authority to grant dramshop licenses, is exciting considerable comment among the assembly men. Mr. Geo. W. Parker, president of the council, said this morning to a POST-DISPATCH reporter that the point urged by McNeary's attorneys upon the attention of the court had occurred to him six years ago, when, as a member of the first assembly under the new charter, he was assisting to redraught all the city ordinances.

"The matter was discussed among several of us," said Mr. Parker, "but we were afraid to raise the point ourselves. Whatever authority the assembly has to grant these licenses has been formally delegated to the city collector, and if the courts shall decide that the assembly had no right to delegate this authority, then I suppose licenses will have to be issued by the assembly."

"That will be an awkward situation," commented the reporter.

"Yes, indeed," assented Mr. Parker.

FAR IN HEIGHT.

Hot Weather as Shown by the Thermometer in St. Louis To-Day.

This is the hottest day of the present summer. Were it not for the delightful breeze which has been blowing all day the heat would be more severely felt than it is. Hot as it is, however, the 30th of June of last year was considerably warmer. The thermometer at eight o'clock this morning registered 79 degrees Fahrenheit, at 12 o'clock it had climbed to 84 degrees and at 3 o'clock it stood at 89. At 8 o'clock a. m., on June 30, 1882, the thermometer registered 83 degrees, at 12 o'clock it was 86 degrees and at 3 o'clock it was 89 degrees, exactly what it was to-day at the same hour. Telegrams report several cases of sunstroke in New York and elsewhere during the present summer, but thus far St. Louis has been exempt from such cases.

SCRUBBING UP.

The Hospital Managers Putting the Place in Decent Order.

Improvements which have Followed the Post-Dispatch Expose—An Investigation to be Demanded Shortly—A Few Opinions on the Subject of Hospital Abuses.

"They're just a scrubbing and a cleaning things up at the Marine hospital, I tell you." an ex-patient, who keeps well posted on the subject, remarked this morning to a POST-DISPATCH reporter. "They say that the place would hardly be recognized by anyone who had been there before the POST-DISPATCH turned the institution up-side-down." Such, upon investigation, proved to be the case. Ever since the first report was made of the horrible condition of the place, the managers, in order to be ready for any sudden inspection, official or otherwise, which might overtake them, have been instituting reforms in the direction of cleanliness which have proved most beneficial. Clean sheets have been laid on the beds and, although the unaccustomed glare of white linen has tried the eyes of some of the patients which had become accustomed to the softer tints of dirt-grey and gravy-brown, the result has on the whole been of great advantage from a sanitary point of view. It is said that one of the patients, whose bed-linen had been changed during his sleep, narrowly escaped a severe chill upon his waking, his bewildered senses, when he beheld the pure white covering, succumbing to the hallucination that a snow-storm had come up in the night. This probably is an exaggeration, but it is one of the stories which are afloat about the hospital, which, just now, is occupying the attention of steamboatmen, to the exclusion of the flood and all other matters of interest to them."

"I have not yet had time to look into the hospital affair," Mr. H. Lourey, vice-president of the St. Louis and Mississippi Valley Transportation company, said this morning to a POST-DISPATCH reporter; "but I intend to do so fully. I have just got back from Chicago, and while I was there I read in the papers of the hospital's condition which they had copied from the POST-DISPATCH, of course, I cannot yet express a personal opinion as to the hospital's condition, but I am convinced that the subject is one requiring investigation and I am going to investigate it."

Congressman-elect J. O. Broadhead was also visited by a POST-DISPATCH reporter, to whom he said: "I read the article in the POST-DISPATCH relating to the United States Marine hospital, and made up my mind to look into the matter before going to take my seat in Congress. I shall visit the hospital and if after inspection I find that reforms are necessary, I shall do what I can to have them made. Of course the hospital is not in my district, but then anything of interest to the whole city can claim my attention. Another matter which I intend to thoroughly investigate in order to bring congress' attention to it is the condition of the barracks here. I am credibly informed that the quarters of the soldiers are anything but what they should be. The blame, as I understand it, does not rest with the officers, who do the best they can, but with congress, which has not made sufficient provision for the purpose. In these matters I shall be glad to coöperate with the POST-DISPATCH in effecting reforms which will increase the comfort of our soldiers and sailors."

Congressman-elect J. H. McLean said that he had not read the article in the POST-DISPATCH, having been so busy of late, but, when the reporter engaged him in conversation on the subject of Marine hospital abuses, he showed a remarkable knowledge of the facts as brought out in the expose made a few days ago. "The fact of the matter is," the doctor-statesman replied with

A KNOWING SMILE,

"I don't want to antagonize these hospital men. I believe in doing one thing at a time. All necessary reforms cannot be accomplished at once, and my great object in contesting the seat to the next congress is to get my snug harbor bill put through. The great trouble with these hospitals is that directly they cure a man of a specific disease they turn him out into the street. A majority of the cases of sickness are caused by chills and fever, and directly the fever is broken, say after three days' hospital treatment, the patient. still weak and unable to work, finds himself driven to loafing around the streets or spending his time in beer saloons and other places utterly unfit for a convalescent man to stop in. Now if we had a snug-harbor these men, being cured of the complaint which took them to the hospital, would be able to lie up in it for three or six or even nine days if necessary, and thoroughly regain their strength there before attempting to resume work. As it is I have seen sailors turned out of the hospital and expected to go back to work who hadn't the strength to lift a cat, much less the tremendous loads which are tackled by the healthy roustabout. This is the measure I want to carry through congress, and will if I only succeed in gaining the seat which was given to me by a clear and incontestable majority of the voters of the Ninth district."

At the office of Conrad & Co. the steamboatmen, in whose employ pilot James was at the time of the explosion, which resulted in his painful hospital experiences, the reporter saw a son of the principal, who said that steamboatmen at home and abroad were talking of nothing else than the POST-DISPATCH'S exposure of the Marine hospital abuses. "They are peculiar men, these steamboat men," young Mr. Conrad said, "and they very much dislike being mixed up with of any kind. I have seen lots of them, just after they came out of the hospital, and even with me they did not care to go into any deep discussion of the hospital's merits. There was one thing, however, which they all said."

"What was that?"

"They all make the remark, when pressed to speak out: 'Well, I don't want to go back to that hospital.' They didn't want any more of it."

Another witness to the horrible condition of the patients in the hospital was found in a young ladyrecently from Chicago, who said:

"I visited the hospital and was shocked at what I saw and heard there. A gentleman friend of mine, who was a patient, I found lying under bed-clothes which were covered with filth. He told me a story which I am positively ashamed to repeat, and would not do it if I did not feel it my duty to do so. He told me that they dressed him in a shirt which had been taken off of a negro patient and that it was swarming with body lice, which he was obliged to pick off one after another. That's what he told me, and I know he was telling the truth."

The telling of the story was accompanied by a blush on the face of the narrator, which was half shame at its nastiness, and half indignation at the vile treatment of the patient. "I am ready to tell all I saw," she added, "whenever an investigation is called for."

Capt. de Lancy informed the reporter that he

HAD BEEN COMMISSIONED

by Capt. Conrad to visit the unfortunate pilot James, and to carry to him a basket of delicacies in the shape of roast chicken and other succulent and enjoyable substitutes for the impracticable and irritable hash which forms the gastronomic staple at the hospital, with a quart of raspberries by way of dessert to replace the dried apples of the hospital supper; but Dr. Fessenden's indignation at the part the captain has taken in the expose was such that he forbade him to enter the premises, and while he took possession of the chicken, he refused to allow the sick man to have the other delicacies. An attempt was made to find Congressman O'Neill, but that able legislator was not to be seen. It is understood that he has so fully satisfied himself of the correctness of the POST-DISPATCH'S reports of the hospital's condition and of the treatment to which the sailors are subjected, that he will shortly insist upon an investigation.

A $100,000 CLUB-HOUSE.

A Magnificent Structure to be Built Surpassing Any Present Club Edifice.

There are on the boards of a firm of architects, who recently established a branch in this city, plans for a palatial club-house, to cost upwards of $100,000, which will, in magnificence of appointment and in equipment for its purposes, surpass anything of the kind in the country. It came to the ears of a POST-DISPATCH reporter that the plans were being made for the Commercial club, which, tiring of meeting from hotel to hotel, desired to possess a suitable habitation of its own, and the architect was applied to for a view of them. He replied that it was the rule of the firm to only allow plans to be inspected upon an order of the parties having the work done. He suggested that the consent of Newton Crane, secretary of the Commercial club, or Mr. Dan Catlin, would be sufficient authority for him to exhibit a work, of which he felt quite proud. With a lingering glance at the perspective of a grand-looking building in white stone and presed brick, of the Italian style of architecture, the reporter called upon Mr. Crane. That gentleman was desolated that he could give no information. "It is true that a magnificent club-house is to be built by a number of gentlemen, who have subscribed to the purpose. I am not one of them, and can therefore say nothing in propriety. You would better see Mr. Dan Catlin."

"At least, tell me where this club palace is to be erected."

"It will be put up on the lot opposite Hugh McKittrick's residence, which is 2913 Locust street. You will remember the property; Russell put up a livery stable there once, which he was induced to move away."

Inquiry for Mr. Dan Catlin, found that gentleman absent in New York.

A call was made at Crow, Hargadine & Co.'s but Mr. McKittrick was found to be absent in Europe.

Mr. John T. Davis referred the reporter to Gerard B. Allen as the proper person to give information on the club house.

Mr. Allen was visited at his iron works, corner of Second and Carr streets, and when the reporter preferred this request, said: "Now, we don't want any notoriety about this matter. A number of gentlemen, about twenty in all, have associated to build a club-house on Locust street, between Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth."

"For the use of the Commercial club?"

"By no means. The Commercial club, in the very nature of its existence, cannot possess a habitation. We are simply putting up this structure for the purpose of renting it, believing that there is a demand for such a building in this city."

"Can you tell at this time who are liable to be your tenants?"

"I cannot say, but I am satisfied that the tenants will be ready when the building is completed."

"And that will be when?"

"It will be put up during the coming fall and winter, and be ready for its occupant next spring."

The interview closed after Mr. Allen had again interposed an objection to a detailed description of the plans until they were finally perfected.

Several members of the St. Louis club were spoken to, as to who would be the tenants of the new palace, but returned evasive answers. Equally mysterious were several of the gentlemen whose names figured several weeks ago in connection with a new club which it is proposed to create from the moribund "West End club."

SUBSIDING WATERS.

The River Falling Rapidly—Relieving the Distress—The Levee.

The sidewalk and a good part of the street on the levee is now free from water, and by to-morrow morning it will be possible to walk from the street in upon the steamboats on dry ground. Business is rapidly resuming its normal condition. The harbor steamer Elon. G. Smith will soon commence the work of cleaning off the thick coating of sediment, which the receding water leaves on the street. On the 25th of June the water reached the highest point, which was 34.91 above low-water mark. It stood at 32-8 to-day at twelve o'clock, a fall of 2.1 feet. Secretary Rennitz, of the health department is organizing a force to clean out the basements of the buildings along the levee. Many of these are at present filled with water and sediment and dangerous compounds in many forms, and immediate attention to them is considered necessary to the health of the people in that locality as well as to the general health of the city. The water in the country north and east of East St. Louis is now falling quite rapidly. At Brooklyn it went down seven inches in the last twenty-four hours, while the water in the river got but little the advantage of it. At Venice business is resuming and scores of people are coming in from the flooded districts for provisions and for cradles and implements for gathering the small portion of their crops that is not entirely submerged. H. C. Cross, who is working in the interests of relief in Chouteau township around Mitchell, says that the relief committee in that locality are helping the people to get out on the bluffs, where they can employment in the harvest fields. Among those who have already gone he named Ezra Walridge, who leaves behind him 200 acres of wheat under water; Michael Maguire, who has 300 acres flooded; John Koch and George Smith each have 150 acres of corn and wheat; M. Sebenalee, Andrew Jackson and James Todd, all of whom have large farms overflowed. There are but few really distressing cases in that neighborhood, he says, because the people started out to find employment as soon as they saw their crops gone.

The relief committee at Venice have put an end to supplying people with rations who are at all able to get along without.

The relief funds received at Venice so far amount to $317. Of this $268 has been expended and the committee hope to make the balance do over till Monday.

In all 103 families, numbering 411 persons, have received aid. As usual in cases of this kind jealousies are beginning to make their appearance.

The relief committee of Brooklyn have thus far received $130, and appear to be doing very well on that. 'Squire Stites, who is the chairman of the relief committee, is giving good satisfaction in the distribution of the provisions which he procured for the funds.

The Indianapolis and St. Louis road have a force of 150 men driving piles and rebuilding the road at the place where it was washed away by the flood from the break in the Madison levee.

CALL AT THE MAYOR'S OFFICE

If You Want to Celebrate the Fourth in a Legal Manner.

Mayor Ewing left the city this morning for his summer home near Vincennes, Ind. He will not return until after the 4th. President George W. Parker, of the council, is in charge of the city government during the absence of the mayor. Mr. Parker said this morning that he was in full sympathy with the action of Mayor Ewing in suppressing the toy pistol. He does not intend to curtail patriotism among the youthful population on the glorious fourth, but he will do everything in his power to reduce the chances of accidents to a minimum. He will, after to-day, issue permits for fireworks on the fourth of July only to all parties who apply for them, who are not likely to abuse the privileges conferred by the permit.

Landlord and Tenant.

Michael Kennedy owns a few small frame houses on King's highway, near Forest park, which resulted in a conflict between himself and a lady named Mrs. Cox, last evening, in which Mr. Kennedy received a very ugly gash over the right eye from a soda-bottle in the hands of the lady, and lost two front teeth from coming in contact with the same weapon. Mrs. Cox has occupied one of the houses for some time past, but stubbornly refused to pay any rent. Kennedy visited the premises yesterday and notified her to move when the row commenced. Mrs. Cox will have a trial before 'Squire Cronin this evening on a charge of assault and battery.

Heavy Imports.

The month now closing is marked by the heaviest payment of duties on imported goods at the St. Louis custom-house that has ever been made. The grand total presented for June is $298,192 22. Of that sum the Belcher sugar refining company paid $125,000.

THE SPANISH COURT SCANDAL.

What is Said and Thought of It in Gossip-Loving Paris.

From the New York World.

The recent arrival of the Spanish queen in Paris and the resolute and successful effort of the Spanish ambassador to prevent her from spending her sojourn here at the Hotel Meurice, are what toute Paris is talking about just now. As soon as El Globo published its first intimation of the demnition wow at present raging between Alfonso and his wife, Paris had got hold of and mastered all the particulars. The Morganatic household, which her christian majesty invaded in the middle of the night, to the great consternation of the duke of Sextos and the furious anger of the king, has been all but photographed.

Here the Spanish royal family has been regarded for years with mingled interest and cynicism. From the moment Isabella arrived in Paris from Pau, with all her half-pompous, half-greasy train of familiars, to the setting forth of Gen. Prim's pert young son to claim the residue of Charles V.'s legacy, every shopkeeper in Paris has politely chuckled in his sleeve at each mention of this decadent branch of the Bourbons. Apart from her morals and the persistence with which Chamberlain Marfori crowded that royal Mr. Snagsby, the king consort, to the wall, both on state and private occasions, the measureless vulgarity of Isabella herself has always been interesting to the honest and, for that matter, to the tricksome burgesses of Paris.

If the ex-queen had boldly confessed her bourgeoise qualities I think the Parisians would have forgiven her and made a favorite of her. But with the appearance and the manners of a mistress of a brasserie she always combined the pride and arrogance of an empress—a combination of fatal effect in these times of a cynic democracy. The life of Isabella in Paris has been conspicuously loud, and her personal entourage has conducted itself with a Saturnine indifference to common propriety which may be characteristic of the household of an exiled monarch, but is by no means conducive to popular esteem. The suit brought against the ex-queen by her pastry cook reduced the ex-royal household to the lowest pitch of burlesque, and from that moment the Spanish Bourbons—one of them, by the way, openly married to a circus-rider—have never had any but a ridiculous relation to the public curiosity of Paris. I need not tell you what that means.

After all, I cannot see that the most profound believer in the theory of the divine right of kings ought to feel shocked at the almost coarse banter with which the news of Alfonso's infidelities have been received in Paris.

It is a large demand on human faith to exact of those familiar with Alfonso's genesis so supreme a reverence for his origin that it should extenuate his fleshlier misbehavior on account of the original sanctity of his source.

Between Christina and Isabella herself intervenes, parentally, a wide gulf of sardonic doubt and disputation. From the flagrant profligacy of the mother it was a natural if illegitimate descent to the still more audacious post-connubial immoralities of the daughter. Yet even the taint of hereditary corruption might have been eradicated had it not been for the conditions which combined, in sinister union, to push Isabella into the foul pitfall of her race. Up to the time of her marriage, by general consent, there was not a purer or simpler girl in Spain than the royal Infanta. When she reached the nubile age the pretenders to her hand were Francis d'Assise, her cousin and son of King Bomba; the count of Montemolin, son of Don Carlos, sustained by Russia, and Prince Leopold of Cobourg, afterward king of the Belgians, the protege of Lord Palmerston and England. When she married her cousin, all Europe, recollecting the vices of her mother, perceived the inevitable future and shrugged its shoulders.

Not even the King Consort himself hugs the illusion that the throne of Spain owes to him the perpetuation of a dynasty or its present occupant. The proudest nation in Europe openly sustains the offspring of a reckless queen and her favorite of an hour, just as in the instance of his mother it bore the yoke imposed upon it by the progeny begotten of an adulterous monarch by an ambitious and fascinating scullion.

Measured by the standard of your slave states Alfonso is a royal quadroon—doubly removed by the vicious alliances of his grandmother and of the queen who bore him from the real succession to the crown. The divine right inheres in him only as a one-fourth fraction. The qualities which he has undeniably inherited compel him to the coarseness and the effrontery which, foreshadowed in his mother, are beginning to burst out into full blossom in his own case.

That this grandson of the Duke of Narvaez, a kitchen hand, and this son of Marshal Prim, a mere military adventurer, has so insulted the proud and ancient house of Hapsburg as to neglect his wife for a common woman of infamous character is regarded here by our social philosophers of Paris as an expression of the indisputable logic of human natures.

The eagerness of the Spanish ambassador to intercept Queen Christina was almost ridiculous. Apartments had been ordered by telegraph at the Hotel Meurice and a royal courier overflowing with dignity waited on the station platform to receive his mistress and her suite. But the carriages of the Spanish embassy were there also, and when the train steamed slowly into the station the poor courier was waived aside and Don Falco d'Adda, Duke of Fernan-Nunez, attended by Senor de Aredano, the Commandant J. de Alvear, M. Dupuy de Lome and the Senors Heredia y Livermore, Miguel y Miguel, Sagrario and de Montalvo welcomed their royal mistress and conveyed her in state to the quarters which had been hurriedly prepared for her at the embassy of Spain.

The Markets.

FORENOON SESSION, CLOSING AT 1 P. M.

Yesterday afternoon St. Louis speculators could not sell enough wheat, and were so anxious that they almost let buyers have what they wanted—and that was very little—at their own prices. October wheat was offered as low as $1 07½ on the curb, and probably could have been bought at $1 07¼. This morning those anxious were trying to buy October back at above $1 09.—"Chicago pulls the string and the puppets dance," remarked an operator, referring to the Chicago quotations and the St. Louis pit. How utterly without reason the average St. Louis speculator is guided by Chicago was shown this morning. The October wheat quotation in Chicago was posted at $1 04½; then the telegraph operator marked 3¾ and 3⅝ as the two following prices. The St. Louis crowd that had been trying to buy at $1 09⅛, immediatly commenced offering to sell at $1 09 and $1 08⅞, and were howling wildly to do so, but when the Chicago quotations were corrected, by the 3¾ being changed to September and 5⅛ marked up for October, the crowd at once made a rapid change of front and yelled for wheat at $1 09⅛.—According to the New York Commercial Bulletin, the latest official estimate for the wheat crop of France is 20,318,000 bushels in excess of the preliminary estimates.—Old Weller's advice to Sam was, "Beware of the vidders, Samivel," but the proper advice to give grain speculators would be, "Bevare of crop estimates." Many a good man has gone wrong on them this year.—The stock of wheat in store here to-day is 20,793 bus larger than last Saturday, the stock of corn is 4,379 bus larger, oats is 7,906 bus smaller and rye is 3,359 bus larger. Withdrawals for the week for city consumption were 21,602 bus wheat, 73,665 bus corn, 32,418 bus oats and 500 bus rye; for rail shipment 3,500 bus wheat, 10,350 bus corn and 3,200 bus oats. No river shipments were made.

The first car of the new crop of wheat to grade No. 2 was received by T. Bartholow & Co., from Moscow, Kentucky. This car sold at auction to-day to D. R. Francis & Brother at $1 10¼.—Dave Francis says he bought this wheat for "the honor of old Kentucky, sah," but it was intimated he wanted it to fill a short sale for July at around $1 06.—The quality and condition of this car of Kentucky wheat was excellent. There was no trouble in grading this wheat No. 2.—It is understood that next week a large amount of wheat and corn will be moved out from the east side elevators, the flood having subsided enough to permit of elevators on the other side once more resuming work. The wheat will be sent to country mills.—A telegram from Wichita, Kas., to R. S. McCormick & Co. states that new wheat is now being loaded for shipment, and that the farmers are selling at 70c a bushel.—Deliveries of wheat on July contracts, it is expected, will be small next Monday, as most of the stock here is held by strong parties who are long on the market; but it is probable that a large amount of corn will be delivered.—The fisherman has got home, Chicago has her "Armour" on, and the bears at once show the stuff they are made of by turning tail and running like scared children. Telegrams from Chicago are to the effect that the arrival of Phil. Armour on the scene has restored public confidence greatly; also that Armour is very mad at the late reports regarding his firm being in trouble, and that he intends to make some one sweat for it.

If it is true, as private advices have it, that certain strong parties in Chicago have been buying steadily for the past few days of wheat, the question naturally arises, from whom will the shorts buy back the stuff they have so recklessly been selling? The line of short wheat in Chicago is said to be something simply enormous. It was sold by men who hadn't a bushel, and new wheat will not be received in that market for a long time to come. If a twist should be put on to prices there, it seems as though the shorts would have a pretty hard time of it.—Reliable information has it that exporters have been quietly buying wheat in Chicago for a couple days past; also that all the wheat to be delivered Monday has been placed and will not affect the market.—There was a sharp reaction in the wheat market to-day. After pounding it down until prices were fully 20c below the high prices paid some time ago, the shorts woke up this morning with the rather uncomfortable feeling that they had bit off more than they could swallow. The weather was as brilliant as yesterday, and the reports from the crop just as favorable; Liverpool was still dull and heavy, but there was a change in the speculative feeling. Yesterday operators could not sell enough; to-day they were trying to buy at almost any price. In Chicago there was a strong market and heavy advance, caused by an urgent demand from shorts, who were anxious to cover. The eastern markets responded to this advance and here there was a regular boom. During the early hours the feeling was nervous and uncertain and prices fluctuated irregularly within a rather small range, but as other markets continued their upward move the tone here became stronger and the demand more and more urgent, culminating finally in a sharp advance, and at the close, when the Chicago "curb" was reported at ⅝c above closing figures of the regular board, the feeling here was excited and advances were established of 2⅝c for July, 2⅜ for August and year and 3½c for September and October over yesterday's latest rates. Corn was irregular at the opening, a strong pressure to sell July and August forcing a decline in those options, while the others were in demand and better; but as other markets were advancing and all outside advices favorable for the longs, the tone improved and there was a considerable advance all along the line; closed strong at ⅞c higher for July, 1⅜c for August, 1⅛c for September, 1⅝c for October and 2⅛c for year. Oats advanced and were in demand, but had few sellers. Latest sales were at advances of ¾ to ⅛c. Cash wheat was firm and sold readily, most of the No. 2 red selling to millers and bringing an advance, but the supply on sale was very small. Cash corn was lower, but the demand was better, selling mainly for shipment, and the feeling firm. Oats were quiet, the demand running very light.

Spots are unimproved, the various markets still exhibiting signs of weakness, while the movement continues slow. There was no actual change in values to-day, Liverpool being flat and irregular, with the smallest number of sales for some time. Futures were dull at the opening and lower, closing weak at a further decline of 1 to 2-64d. At New York and New Orleans spots were quiet at 10 5-16 and 9 13-16 respectively; trading at both these places was very light. In futures the first named was steady at an advance of 2 to 4 points, and continuing steady but dull, closed steady at a partial advance of 1 to 2 points above the opening figures. New Orleans on the contrary was from 1 to 3 points lower at the opening and dull, but advancing closed at an advance of 2 to 8 points. Local reports were very dull and easy. Receipts only amounted to three bales, and although not quotably changed, values were bearish.

CATTLE—With the exception of a few sales in small lots to retailers and speculative buyers there was nothing doing in this market during the most of the forenoon. The supply was somewhat larger than is usual on a Saturday, there being quite a number left over from the day before. Buyers, however, were scarce and were apparently indifferent about purchasing, although prices were in their favor to a certain extent. The feeling was weak, and the market generally unsettled and largely downward in tendency.

Wavelets.

The river continues receding about six-tenths of a foot per day.

The particulars of the Bright Light sinking will be found in the local.

The local packets are the Spread Eagle, Ste. Genevieve, Kendall and Gem City.

Business is looming up on the levee once more, the water making room for business.

The Eagle brought in two barges, one of stone, the other loaded with sand. She returns to Grafton this afternoon.

The mud left behind in the decline emits a horrible stench. The harbor boat is a good cleaner, but she will need assistance this time.

The Diamond Jo boat Sidney arrived from St. Paul this morning and will return this afternoon. She will have an immense trip of passengers.

Commodore Manion's steamer Colorado, will make two trips to-day. The first leaving at 8:30 will be to Madison and the second at one o'clock to Alton. A pleasant day is assured.

The Anchor Line will send the W. P. Halliday to New Orleans this afternoon, and she will be the last boat to leave this port under the old regime. Both companies will run under one head after this.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1883.

THE toy pistol is to be suppressed. For this relief much thanks.

WE hope to hear from Congressman MCLEAN on the Marine hospital abuses.

THE summer is upon us, with potent arguments in favor of temperance in drinking and also in eating.

WHAT are they piling up testimony against HILL for? They have enough already, even if it is barred by the statute of limitations.

A THRILLING publication in another column of "Leaves from the Diary of a Hypocrite," shows what kind of a democrat the "Old Reliable" is.

THE Republican's current remarks about its fidelity to democratic principles recalls the adage that a certain class of people should have long memories.

WE are willing to make a bet with the surgeon in charge at the Marine hospital that in two years from now the patients will be in the hospital and he will be out of it.

THE trade dollars were coined as dollars and paid out as dollars by the government. The plain dictate of honesty is that the government should redeem them in legal tender dollars.

HIS honor the mayor need not hope to please everybody. Some people are complaining because he shot in the city last Sunday, and now others are complaining because he shot out of the city yesterday.

THE men who made the star route indictments a farce under GARFIELD have quarreled with the men who made them a failure under ARTHUR, and it is probable that a great deal of interesting truth will be told.

SENATOR CONGER has had his son appointed postmaster at Washington. He has another son clerk of a committee, and a brother quartered in one of the territories, but several of the family are yet unprovided for.

SENATOR VOORHEES severely arraigned BREWSTER'S crooked management of the department of justice in a Washington court the other day, and the next day President ARTHUR invited the "Tall Sycamore" to dinner. This is a straw.

WE notice a general disposition to adjourn on the 4th of July. The sun and moon, however, will continue in their courses, and, as the POST-DISPATCH will not acknowledge itself inferior to any other luminary, it will appear on time as usual.

ATTORNEY COOK, of Washington, says that BREWSTER got his office as the result of a bargain with BLISS. BLISS was ARTHUR'S chum, and bargained to make BREWSTER attorney-general if BREWSTER would give him the star route per diem. Shouldn't wonder if it was true.

WITH one son already on the pay rolls, a brother holding a judgeship in the territories, and another relative chief of a division in the treasury, Senator CONGER of Michigan has just scored another brilliant victory for reform within the party by having his son Frank appointed postmaster of Washington with a salary of $3,000 a year. Now if he will go west and steal an Indian reservation, the Michigan senator will be pretty nearly even with LOGAN.

NEW ORLEANS had a narrow escape yesterday from defaulting in her interest, and was only saved by the presence of mind of an old citizen of St. Louis, J. H. OGLESBY, who drew his check for the amount needed, some $70,000. OGLESBY is the kind of a citizen that is needed in all great cities—the type of a man who will not live in a city without showing his confidence in its future. New Orleans is going through a heap of trouble now, but she is bound to come out all right, and to be one of the great ports of the world.

IN a letter from one of our well-known citizens on the subject of street improvements, in another part of this paper, will be found some interesting suggestions about street economy and roadways. Why the cross-section of a St. Louis street should resemble the cross-section of a mud-turtle is a mystery we have never been able to understand, but then our whole street system is much more like a sausage than a mud-turtle; it is all mystery. Only one thing is known, that our streets are the worst this side of Constantinople, and any change would be an improvement.

JOE BLACKBURN is in Washington insisting that he is, next to RANDALL, the strongest candidate for the speakership, and that if the opposition to RANDALL would unite on him he would be elected. The utter impossibility of uniting the opposition to RANDALL on the impetuously self-assertive gentleman from the Elkhorn neighborhood was demonstrated when RANDALL was elected the last time, and there is a suspicion that the same gentleman is consciously at work to elect RANDALL again. As between RANDALL and BLACKBURN a great many anti-RANDALL men would choose the former.

THE philanthropic efforts of the POST-DISPATCH have been rewarded by scouring the removal of one idiot from the chicken-coop in which he had been confined for thirteen months to more suitable quarters, and now there is another idiot whom we should like to see taken care of by the proper authorities. This is one PRETORIOUS, who makes himself responsible for the idiotorial asininity of the Westliche Post, and who by a violent effort succeeded in reducing himself to the superfluous idiocy of saying that there was not one word of truth in our report; that we published it only because the family implicated were Germans, and that if they had been Irish we would never have printed it. Inasmuch as there are about three times as many Germans in this city who take the POST-DISPATCH as there are who take the Westliche Post, we have about three times as many reasons for thinking well of the Germans as our idiotorial contemporary has. Inasmuch as the Westliche Post has not had a local item in four years that it has not stolen from our columns, it should have more delicacy than to discredit the source of its news. Even a hog that munches acorns in the shade of an oak knows better than to try its futile tusks in damaging the tree that gives the beast sustenance.

ON this thirtieth day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, the drowsy Republican, after lying asleep all night, lies awake as follows:

The Republican's support of the principles of the democratic party (hem!) is universally recognized as strong in logic, whilst moderate and conservative in tone.

Yet on the fifth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, this same Republican, still lying, as is its habit asleep or awake, and by day or night, supported the principles of the democratic party by the following argument, which will be universally recognized as strong in logic whilst moderate in tone:

There is but one disposition to be made of the democratic party. It must be retired to the hospital of veteran invalids that a more vigorous fighter may take its place.

Col. GEORGE KNAPP is said to have publicly declared that he would give a hundred thousand dollars if he had never printed those words. But as he did not have the hundred thousand dollars, and as he had printed those words his offer is still open.

THE Neue Freie Presse of Chicago tells a pretty hard story about the government officials who compromised the claim against Boss HESING, the Chicago whisky ring thief, for the modest consideration of one-seventh of one cent on the dollar. The amount of the claim against HESING was $130,000 and interest, and when the proposal was made to compromise the claim for $1,000, one RICHARD MICHAELIS immediately offered to pay the government $10,000 for the claim. As HESING, however, is still a "boss" and controls the Staats Zeitung he is not without "influence," and the government is treating Mr. MICHAELIS as the criminal and Mr. HESING as the innocent victim. We advise Mr. MICHAELIS to withdraw: the government knows its friends.

WE learn with pain that our mellifluous esteemed contemporary, J. WEST GOODWIN, even he of the Sedalia Bazoo, has been arrested and held in durance vile until bond was produced for his answering to the charge of publishing a lottery advertisement, but at the same time we rejoice that the majesty of the law has been vindicated. The lottery advertising is a constant temptation to the impecunious editor alike in the rural weekly, and in the decaying senescence and decreptitude of metropolitan organism, and it behooves the officers of the law to remove that temptation by making the punishment of yielding stronger than the rewards.

THE various technical and special commercial papers published in St. Louis are both an evidence of the growth of her trade and a great assistance to it, and we are glad to note the growth of the St. Louis Trade Journal, which has now passed under the sole ownership of Mr. S. M. YEAMAN and is edited by Mr. F. F. HILDER. The Trade Journal has already distinguished itself by several brilliant hits, and as a newspaper devoted to the interests of the Mississippi valley it has all good wishes for its success.

WHILE Gen. CROOK is on his way to Washington, under orders to explain to Mr. TELLER why he dared to stop the Chiricahua raids, it is announced that the armed bucks who were following their captured families in to surrender are being repelled and driven back upon the war-path by armed parties of territorial militia. Between CROOK and TELLER there is a great blunder somewhere, and it is not on CROOK'S side.

IN the midst of disastrous floods and the wreck of lard corners, it is consoling to hear that LEW WALLACE still stands firm at Constantinople and keeps up his bombardment of the porte with notes protesting against the Turkish tariff.

AFTER a protracted hunt those Virginia editors have found each other and fought the long-expected duel and returned home. Both are travel weary and one of them will nurse a game leg for a month or two.

WHAT the Republican is now:

The Republican is now the only democratic English newspaper published in St. Louis.—[Prospectus of the lying old sheet for 1883.

What the Republican was ten years ago:

The Republican's "scheme to break up the democratic party," as it is called, is getting along better than could have been expected.—[Editorial of Sept. 17, 1873.]

Is there no bridewell except Greystone for this brazen political strumpet?

THE NEW YORK PRESS.

Current Editorial Comment of the Metropolitan Journals.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 30.—The World to-day says: "It is gratifying to know that we have about seen the last of that monetary nuisance, the untradable trade dollar. It is going the way of all tramps."

THE TIMES.

The Times says: "The promotion of the assistant postmaster in Washington to the head of the office has a specious appearance of conforming to civil service reform principles, but probably if the assistant had not been a son of Senator Conger he would not have been in the office at all. His expeditence dates from last November, when he was put on the road of promotion from the business department of the organ of the star route thieves to the head of the post-office of the national capital."

THE SUN.

The Sun says: "The trade dollar must go. It has been flying out of sight at a tremendous rate within the past few days. Let us have lawful money."

THE HERALD.

The Herald says: "Yesterday the circulation of trade dollars was practically suspended in New York. We give this notice to workingmen, that they may be warned in time not to accept them in payment this Saturday evening."

PERSONAL POINTS.

—It costs Turkey over $15,000,000 annually to support the Sultan and his harem.

—The duke of Cambridge objects to the presence of women at public dinners, and will not preside if any be present.

—Mr. Beecher is seventy years of age, but it stirs his bile when he is addressed as a septuagenarian. He says he prefers to be called plain Henry.

—McKee Rankin's contract with Shook and Collier, as leading man of the Union Square theater, calls for $300 a week for a season of forty-two weeks.

—Dom Pedro, of Brazil, wears white silk and white satin when he sits on his throne, a necklace of immense diamonds and emeralds and a rich lace cravat.

—Joe Jefferson's hobby now is fine cattle. He took a lot of valuable Alderneys down to his Louisiana farm in May, and it is estimated that his bovine flock is now worth $75,000.

—Herr Barnay, the German actor, who was divorced from his first wife shortly before his recent American tour, has just become engaged to Frl. Minna Arndt, of the royal theater in Dresden.

—In Rome, Augustus' tomb is a variety theater, Hadrian's mausoleum a barracks, Nero's gardens the pope's gardens, Cæsar's death-place a green grocery, Marcellus' theater a blacksmith's shop.

—Poor Carlotta, the Mexican emperor Maximilian's wife, is not "rigorously secluded," as John Bigelow says, but has "ladies of honor and a household quite regal," so the London World says.

—A London journal says; "His highness the Thakor of Wadhwan Kathiawar and suite have arrived at the Langham hotel." This is supposed to be Col. Tom Ochiltree's style of registering at a hotel when abroad.

—If the congratulatory letters sent to Mr. Beecher on his seventieth birthday mean anything, that gentleman could probably borrow more money without security than any person living today in this country, Gen. Grant not excepted.

—Green, the reformed gambler, who achieved considerable notoriety thirty odd years ago by his lectures, was sent to prison in Philadelphia day before yesterday charged with obtaining money on false pretenses. He is now seventy years old and has a wife and eight children.

—Senator Edmunds was surprised at the welcome extended him when he entered the harbor at Victoria, B. C., a few days ago. Salutes were fired, flags were thrown to the breeze from all the flagstaffs and the British shipping in the harbor was gaily decked.

—Mackey, the California bonanza man whose wife has been "astonishing the natives" in Europe, is investing largely in works of art. According to London Truth he has paid $500,000 to Sir Philip Miles of Leigh Court, England, for his collection of pictures, and is negotiating with the Marquis of Lansdowne for some of the pictures in his gallery at Bowood.

POLITICAL POINTERS.

THE Albany papers favor Saratoga as the place for holding both of the next national political conventions.

EVERY governor of Ohio is a possible president, and the whole country takes an interest in Ohio elections.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR of New York for president, and Robert Lincoln of Illinois for vice-president, is the Chicago Tribune's ticket.

HARTFORD COURANT: If any democratic journal of standing and influence has advised the party to rally around Gen. Hancock again next year, the fact has escaped our notice.

PHILADELPHIA RECORD: The newspaper founded by Horace Greeley denounces Judge Hoadly for supporting the democratic ticket in 1872, and thus makes a rather disgusting exhibition of retromingency.

AN Albany correspondent of the Boston Journal (Ind.) predicts a vigorous republican campaign in New York state this year. He foresees the renomination of the present state officers, as far as they are republican.

THE dispute about the boundary line between Massachusetts and New Hampshire, which has been in existence since 1740, is in no fair way of being settled. The error of boundary gives to Massachusetts 50,000 acres that properly belong to New Hampshire.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION: Mr. Voorhees declares that "a cow and a goose are the greatest fools he knows of." We judge from this that Mr. Voorhees knows nothing of the man who believes that the people of the south are in favor of the present tariff system.

ABOUT WOMEN.

THE dear girl who strikes her lover with a feather fan will hit him with the broomstick in after life.

FIVE of the graduating class at Vassar make their own dresses. To a bachelor, the temptation is strong to marry all five.

A STORM washed the blacking off a New York woman's eyebrows, and so injured her optics that she was blind for three weeks. She should have used oil colors.

A PHILADELPHIA woman was poisoned by holding a cent in her mouth while hunting street-car change, and one in Chicago was similarly afflicted by holding a street-car ticket.

A HANDSOME woman of Derby, Conn., has been arrested for complicity in the recent alarming burglaries in the Naugatuck valley, including the abstraction of $1,000 from the safe of the postoffice in Bristol.

A BLUNDERING compositor, setting up the toast: "Woman—without her man, she would be a savage," got the punctuation in the wrong place, which made it read: "Woman, without her man, would be a savage."

Answers to Correspondents.

OLD DEMOCRAT—It was in 1873 that the editor of the Republican said that any man who voted the democratic ticket ought to be kicked to death by asmule, and that he was willing to do the kicking.

OUR MAIL POUCH.

The Sinuous Ball.

ST. LOUIS, June 29, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Please answer the following: G. says a ball pitched to within two feet of the home plate can make a curve in any direction; I say no. Please answer, and oblige F. MALLOY.

City Ordinances.

ST. LOUIS, June 29, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Will you please inform me, through your columns, if the city ordinances are published the same as the state statutes. If so, where can a copy be obtained? If they are not published, where can I obtain information regarding ordinance regulating licenses? J. E. BRANSON.

[They are published, and for sale at the city register's office. Apply to the register for information.—ED. P.-D.]

Marriage Licenses.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 29, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

To settle a dispute, please state in your valuable paper whether it be necessary in applying for a marriage license that the gentleman be accompanied by the lady or her father, provided the lady be of age, and oblige, MARRIAGE.

[The recorder will not grant a license unless he knows personally that the lady is of legal age. In the case of applicants who are personally unknown to the recorder, the easiest way to satisfy he requirements of the law is for the lady to appear in person.—ED. P.-D.]

Equestrian.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 30, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Will you be kind enough to publish the title of some book on lady equestrianship or the address of the St. Louis equestrian school, and greatly oblige a constant reader.

[The two most recent works on horsemanship to be had in this country are one by Ghislani Durant and the other by E. L. Anderson. The riding school is in the new armory.—ED. P.-D.]

Towns That Grow.

ST. LOUIS, June 28, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Would you please let me know through the columns of your valuable paper the populations of the following two cities: Santa Fe, N. M., and El Paso, Texas, and oblige, A CONSTANT READER.

[The progress of our southwestern cities outstripe the census tables, and we do not know how many inhabitants these two cities now claim. Perhaps some of our readers can inform us.—ED. P.-D.]

Answer to "Children Not Wanted."

ST. LOUIS, June 30, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In answer to your correspondent of yesterday in regard to children not wanted, the writer would say: If parents would take proper control of their children and make them keep in children's places, there would be less trouble in getting places, but the majority of parents now-a-days let their children do as they please; they romp and get into places where they should not go; they break and destroy whatever they desire; their parents probably never remonstrate with them, if they do the children pay no attention to it. That, Mr. Editor, is the cause why people with children cannot get board at a respectable boarding-house or rent rooms in a house with other families.

ONE WHO HAS HAD EXPERIENCE.

The Saloon.

ST. LOUIS, June 30, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In reply to my letter about saloons as a resort for workingmen a lady of Warrensburg, Mo., asks several questions, which I hope she will pardon me if I answer "in a bunch," as you, Mr. Editor, have done already. Thousands of the men referred to have no families and many not even relatives. I cannot answer the question about workingwomen positively. They deserve all the "rest and entertainment" they can get, for many there are who have a very hard time of it. There are some workingmen who might spend much less money and save more. I do not attempt to excuse spendthrifts, bummers and rowdies. I do not believe Mrs. Marker, who doubtless resides in a small village, can possibly understand the "true inwardness" of this question as applied to large cities. The fact remains incontrovertible that the tired and worn-out workingman often finds contentment, friendship and welcome extended to him in saloons that no other institution vouchsafes to him. This is a sad condition of things, but "'tis a pity 'tis true." EXPERIENCE.

As to Children.

ST. LOUIS, June 30, 1883.

To the Edit or of the Post-Dispatch.

In your yesterday's issue, an old citizen complains that house-owners and real estate agents do not want tenants with children, and wants to know what poor people are to do with their children. A poor man myself, and a life-long friend of the poor, I would say: Take them to the country. There they can have pure air and sunshine, which God gives to us all for the taking. There, too, poor families can feed and clothe their children plentifully and comfortably, and cheaply as well. True, the fathers may have to work for low wages and have long hours exacted for a day's work. But they will be more independent and less of slaves with farmer employers than in the swelteringcity at trades and higher wages under the bosses. By all means, let the laboring poor, whether skilled or unskilled laborers, take their children to the country, or send them there if they cannot go themselves. If this is not done, many a poor man's child in the city will be carried to its grave before our summer's solstice has passed away. Besides, it is a terrible cruelty to keep children penned up within seething walls, where they cannot be sufficiently fed and decently clothed. Better the father should cultivate his "con acre" and the family live in a cabin in the country than do this. By all means, therefore, and as a friend of the industrious poor, I repeat, take the children to the country. AN OLD BACHELOR.

A Word for the Bohemians.

ST. LOUIS, June 28, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Allow me a little space of your paper, to tell the public that very often the nation and nationality Bohemian are grossly misrepresented. Now and then we see in the papers the word "Bohemian" pertaining to a gypsy, or a tramp. That is altogether wrong; in the first place, it shows ignorance, as to the matter of fact, and it is a slander towards Bohemians.

Bohemia in Europe is governed by Austria, but the inhabitants of Bohemia were known to be civilized and cultured, when civilization was very scanty throughout Europe, and the high schools in the City of Prag, the capital of Bohemia, known to be erected five hundred years ago, tell us that to be a fact.

Bohemians have emigrated to this free soil of the United States of America, to the number of about a half million, and they have become good and peaceable citizens; the records show that for them, for if we look all over the United States, in the penitentiaries and workhouses, we will see that, in comparing other nationalities, we will find Bohemians as "convicts" very scarce; that fact speaks for itself.

They are subscribers to numerous English and German papers, and they issue in nearly every state in the Union a daily or weekly journal devoted to their culture and their literature. In Chicago they have a daily and weekly, "Concord American" and "Future;" in New York the "American Workingman" and the "Workingman's Paper," both daily; in Cleveland, "The Star of New Period;" in Racine, Wis., "The Slavia," established in 1861. Of the last named paper the editor, Charles Jonas, is at present state senator, to whom all the Wisconsin papers have paid great respect regardless of party, in view of his action in the state senate. They issue numerous other weekly journals in Iowa City, Texas and Omaha. Here in St. Louis Rev. Jos. Hessun is publisher and editor of the Voice, a paper devoted strictly to the Catholic religion.

If any one wishes to be joyful let him visit Klutsman's cave, in South St. Louis, July 1, where he will be convinced that Bohemians are worthy to associate with. J. W. MARSEH.

SATURDAY CHAT.

AM I going to the opening reception of the Harmonie Club to-night? Yes, I am. I may be recognized by my wearing three white studs in my shirt front. I am not a member of the Harmonie, but I appreciate the invitation highly, because I appreciate the club highly. In fact, I may say that St. Louis is like the republican party—what it wants is Harmonie.

TRAVELING across the dreary stretch of Mississippi which all St. Louisans pass in going to New Orleans, an intelligent fellow-travele in the, fellowship of the smokers' compartment remarked: "This is a mighty poor country, and I'll tell you what proves it. You don't see any Jews around anywhere. I tell you wherever business is lively and money is to be made you can be certain to see Jews taking a hand in it." Conversely wherever you see the Jews flourishing and wearing good clothes and buying tickets to the opera and building first-class club-houses you may be certain that that place is prosperous and flourishing, and that the Jews have done their full share to promote its welfare. If it were only for selfish reasons every citizen in St. Louis would have cause to join the POST-DISPATCH in its congratulations to the Harmonie club on the new and magnificent home of which it takes possession tonight.

SPEAKING of clubs, it must have taken very good management to carry on this Harmonie club with only some six score members and to accumulate a building fund of $25,000. I believe all the other clubs except the Elks, with three times the membership of the Harmonie, have only succeeded in accumulating a sinking fund; that is to say, a fund that sinks as fast as you raise it. The St. Louis and the Mercantile are now solid, but the University made such a deep dive that it is just beginning to show the top of its head above the perilous waters of debt.

IN spite of the vehement and repeated assertions to the contrary, the much-talked-of club building of the Commercial club is materializing. It is to be located in the heart of Stoddard addition, on Locust street, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth; it is to be of stone; it is to cost $100,000; the architects are the well-known firm who planned the Memorial hall and the new Church of the Messiah, and it is to lay over everything in the club line in St. Louis. It is safe to say that many a quiet game of whist and euchre will be played within its majestic precincts, and an occasional very cold bottle of extra dry will be sampled, and the club will be rich enough to pay even the high license which its members recommended at Jefferson City last winter for plain saloons.

DID I take in the races? Well, the races did not take me in to any great extent. I have been there before, and the experience of racing in St. Louis, as far as my recollection goes, is that it always stops short of being a success. It must have been fifteen years ago since I climbed up into a whitewashed pavilion that looked as if a tornado had blown it in from some country fair, and saw some alleged races at a place called the Abbey track. They were a success, so-called, but the best horses had engagements elsewhere, the stakes were just too small, and the attendance was not as great as it should have been, and the whole performance was a rehearsal of the spring meeting of 1883. There was a great big "if" about it and there has always been a great big "if" about St. Louis races ever since.

I AM beginning to think that in managing a jockey club it is well for the managers to know something about horses and about racing. The elegant gentlemen who have so kindly rendered gratuitous assistance to Mr. Ecker in his attempt to acclimate this attractive but costly amusement in St. Louis deserve credit for the efforts they have made to attitudinize as experts. Some of them have appeared with field-glasses, and have worn an anxious look; nearly all of them have gone around and bought pools and by constant attention to the race-cards they could almost always tell the pedigree of the horses, provided they didn't get mixed up. But they could not wholly conceal the amateur character of the performance, and an amateur jockey club is the next worst thing to an amateur theatrical.

I HAVE better hopes of the race-track, which the Fair association is going to lay out as soon as the city fathers will grant the possession of the unused and unopened streets in that flat stretch of ground west of the present fair grounds. In the first place the fair has the prestige of success, and it can always furnish that concourse of spectators which is the first condition of any successful spectacle. The best show in the world is a failure if you cannot get the people to go to it, and any show where immense crowds of people go "on pleasure bent" must be considered a success, if only from that circumstance. With the prestige of the fair, and all of its varied attractions to draw people out to see races on its new mile track, and with heavy enough purses hung up, we may expect even our amateur racing dudes to make racing in St. Louis what it never has been heretofore, a permanent prosperous and successful St. Louis institution.

LAST week I went out to take a look at the future race track; it was only a flat stretch of low ground, wholly unoccupied, and looked as if it might be a spot

"Where no man comes
Or had come since the making of the world."

But one lone tree on the southern edge of the tract brought me back at once with the swiftness of meditation to my first and last visit to that scene, just twenty-three years ago, when I stood there in the shade of just such a tree to witness the drill of the famous "Ellsworth Zouaves." How much the world has moved since those trim-built, well drilled New York dry goods clerks came west with their baggy red trousers and frogged blue jackets, to show us in perfection that mimicry of war which was so soon to be turned into terrible earnest. What a beautiful spectacle it was—the double-quick movements, the deploying, the skirmishing; and how admirably their young captain displayed for our admiration that manly beauty which was so soon to be quenched in death. His monument is in his New York birth-place, but there are worse sites for a monument than the open field in which the people of St. Louis first saw the Ellsworth Zouaves.

EVERYBODY has read more or less of the proceedings of the gentlemen who have organized what is called the merchants' and manufacturers' display, and there are probably some people who think it is going to be a sort of an appendix to to the Veiled Prophets. It is so far from being anything of the kind that it proposes to take the shine out of the Veiled Prophets, and to advance the peg of scenic display so high that the Veiled Prophets could not reach it with a step-ladder. From the character of the gentlemen who have made themselves answerable for the success of the undertaking, and from my knowledge of their way of doing things, I feel confident that the Veiled Prophets will have to put on all the style they know to save themselves; the M. & M. D. has a business-like air about it.

More Beer, Less Whisky.

From the New York Herald.

Statistics just published show that the quantity of beer brewed in the United States during the twelve months ending with April was five hundred and thirty-eight million gallons, or twenty-three million gallons more than was made during the preceding year. It appears that the production has been steadily and rapidly increasing year by year. The brew of 1883 shows an advance of a hundred and six per cent over that of 1875. But let not good temperance people too quickly take alarm at these figures. The census returns show that while the production of malt liquors in the country increased in value during the decade between 1870 and 1880 from fifty-five to a hundred and one million dollars, the production of distilled liquors increased during the same period from thirty-six only to forty-one million dollars. Is not this good proof that the people are drinking more beer and less whisky.

Jeff. Davis.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Just returned from his plantation in Mississippi, Mr. Davis was the picture of a well-preserved old age, his spirits as vivacious and his faculties as clear and vigorous as they were forty years ago. More than thirty years ago we saw him led into the senate by his devoted wife, in an apparently hopeless condition of physical debility, his eyes concealed behind green goggles and his head enveloped in a silk handkerchief. And yet, when a debate arose or any duty of his position had to be discharged, there was no member of the body who was more prompt or better prepared to fulfill it than the then senator from Mississippi. Now seventy-five years of age, his physical condition is superior in all respects to that in which we recognized him thirty-five years ago.

THE OLD RELIABLE.

Repudiation of Democracy by "the Only Democratic Paper."

Extracts from the Editorial Record of the Republican on the Subject of Democracy.

The following extracts from the back files of the Republican will serve to give the democrats of Missouri a reminder of the character of the paper which assumes to act as the organ of the democratic party and to pass on the credentials of democrats:

[July 28, 1873.]

We believe then, as we believe now, that for any good it might do in the national field the Democratic party was and is practically dead.

[July 23, 1873.]

Hence we say, when patriotism demands it, let the Democratic party slide.

[July 30, 1873.]

The most effective way to destroy the republican party is, first, to destroy the Democratic party. The democracy has not recovered a single inch of ground since the war. Missouri was carried by a liberal-republican bolt, and not by democrats.

BEFORE GOV. ALLEN'S ELECTION.

[August 4, 1873.]

The Republican does not claim to be a democratic organ.

[August 6, 1873.]

If there were any doubt of the vital exhaustion of the democratic party the very conduct of its champions would dissipate it.

[August 6, 1873.]

It is not probable another National Democratic convention will be held to present a platform and nominate a ticket.

[August 8, 1873.]

The republican party is the overshadowing party in the land. It controls thirty of the thirty-seven states, and wields the whole authority of the Federal government.

[August 9, 1873.]

We do not expect party independence from the creatures who live off the patronage received from sheriffs and circuit clerks, or hold sinecure clerkships in the legislature.

[August 16, 1873.]

The Republican don't claim to be the jorgan of any party. It claims the privilege of opposing the election of nominees of both parties. We do not seek to lead the democratic party. We do not pretend to speak for it. It owes no allegiance to any existing party.

[August 21, 1873.]

The Ohio canvass is just what might have been expected when the venerable Wm. Allen was nominated by the still more venerable democracy —a dreary, insipid and unprofitable fighting of the late war over again.

[August 22, 1873.]

If the democratic party could detach itself from the late war it might, perhaps, hope to succeed But it cannot do this. It can not even detach itself from Jefferson Davis.

[August 25, 1873.]

There may be questions whether the democratic party is dead or only dying. The difference is but slight.

[September 1, 1873.]

The Wisconsin democracy is no more as a political organization.

Democracy has got to mean different things in different places, preparatory to meaning nothing in all places.

[September 3, 1873.]

There is something irresistibly indicrous in the present attitude of the Massachusetts democracy. Nobody in that state thinks, talks or cares about the democracy.

[September 5, 1873.]

There is but one disposition to be made of the democratic party, it must be retired to the hospital of veteran invalids, that a more vigorous fighter may take its place.

[September 5, 1873.]

The democracy has dwindled to such feeble proportions that in some states it is invisible, and in others it is insignificant. Its enemies no longer fear it. It does not possess a grain of influence in national politics. Its platforms drop like lumps of lead. Retire it to the hospital of veteran invalids.

[September 8, 1873.]

It is a creedless party. It is half-dead, with a history behind it and a blank before it. It does not know and cannot tell what it wants. Even as a constitutional party it has lost its virility. The attempt to construct a creed results in such miserable bosh, as has just been put forth by the eunuch democracy of Massachusetts.

[September 13, 1873.]

Whether the democracy is stone-dead or only near dead to-day is a question of little interest. I will be before long so unmistakably lifeless that its organs will yield assent to its obsequies. By November, 1874, even the St. Louis Times and the Jefferson City Tribune will be ready to give it up for dead.

[September 17, 1873.]

The Republican's scheme to break up the democratic party, as it is called, is getting along better than could have been expected.

[September 18, 1873.]

Democracy has become the dream spirit of the age, that forever broods over the departed splendor of the party banner.

[September 29, 1873.]

The democracy of Minnesota has finally dissolved. Let it dissolve.

[October 4, 1873.]

The fact is, and it has been demonstrated over and over again, that the country has made up its mind not to accept the best imaginable platform and the democracy together. It will accept the republican party with a bad platform rather than the democratic party with a good one.

AFTER ALLEN AND GASTON'S ELECTION.

[October 16, 1873.]

There is no such thing as sound democracy of Missouri.

The Republican has withdrawn from any slight allegiance it may have held to the democratic party. We bade the party a gentle adieu when it was in the height of its power. The doctrines of the democratic party have ceased to be a living conviction in the minds of the people.

[October 18, 1873.]

And yet all the efforts of the Bourbons cannot save the democratic party. The Baltimore abdication is irrevocable. It cannot be recalled. What the local democracy have done in Ohio amounts to little. The disorganization of democracy is so nearly complete that a reorganization would be far more difficult than a formation of a new party. It has no existence in one-third of the states. It has only a perceptible existence in one-third. It has no national existence at all. What the Ohio democracy have just accomplished is no proof of their power; it is only proof of republican weakness.

[October 20, 1873.]

The vitality of the democratic party is just sufficient to make it of positive injury. If a man has been indicted for stealing sheep, no amount of subsequent piety will remove the stigma from his name. So long, then, as the democratic party maintains its originality, the republican managers are certain of their ascendancy.

[October 27, 1873.]

But for the stimulating spoonful of cordial the democracy received in Ohio, it would have given up the ghost.

OPEN AGAIN.

The Chinese Opium Dens Throw Open the Doors to the Fiends.

A Growing Evil which the Police Look at Indifferently and are Unable to Punish for Want of a Law.

A few months ago the police served informal notice on the proprietors of the "hop joints" that the sale of the drowsy drug would involve them in troubles that were to be avoided. By reason of his great fear of the "Melican watchman" the Chinese are law-abiding citizens, and can always be reckoned on for the ranks of the law and order party. Four opium dens were in operation at the time, but they all closed doors. At that time an effort was made to legislate on the evil, but the move was tainted with a very suspicious odor, and the bill making the sale of opium by the Chinese a misdemeanor fell through. At this juncture the legislators were laboring with the prohibition question and not anxious to put themselves on record as favoring any prohibitory law. The country members were unacquainted with the extent of this growing evil, and for these reasons the bill died in the senate. Shortly after the police order to close was issued, Cloe, who owned the largest "joint," moved to the building on the south side of the alley on the west side of Eighth, between Market and Walnut streets, where he ostensibly went into his old business of keeping a Chinese boarding-house. The demand for opium by the friends whom he had graduated from his old place was too strong, and the inducement to take in the quarters too great to be resisted long and successfully by the mercenary Mongolian. He opened a select place, but shortly afterwards moved back into the alley between Seventh and Eighth and Market and Walnut streets and received all his old customers. There are now two "joints" running, both situated in the place above described. Wam Tie is the proprietor of the "joint" on the south side of the alley. The fixtures of this place were purchased from Cloe, who exercises a general supervision over his countrymen, and might be described as a

CHINESE PADRONE.

The rooms are located in the cellar, under a rickety old house, not at all remarkable for cleanliness. The "joint" is reached after a journey through a long, low and narrow gang-way, several steps below the alley level. Ascending another pair of stairs at the south end of the yard, a space about ten feet square, with half a dozen gates and as many pairs of stairs opening on it, is reached. Turning west again, the first room is reached by another descent. A stranger was never known to find the "joint" on a direction, the first visit requiring the services of a guide who has been there before. On one side of the first room was a rough bunk covered with two sheets and some old blankets. Last night when a POST-DISPATCH reporter visited Chinese alley the "joints" were deserted owing to the heat. On each end of the bunk lay a lamp and pipe, about which three pillows, bearing the impressions of the last smokers, were circled. The place was lighted by the flickering flames of the "cooking" lamp and a leaky coal oil "gilu." The fumes of the opium smoke commingled with the smell of coal oil forming an atmosphere anything but fragrant. Wam Tie and his almond-eyed associates were busy in the upper stories at the time of the reporter's visit, and the "joint" looked deserted. The snoring of a sleeper attracted the visitor to an inner room known as

THE MORGUE.

This apartment partially extends under the alley roadway and, on passing close to the building the fumes of opium issuing from a nailedup window are discoverable. On a small bunk in this abode of darkness lay a young man sleeping soundly. It would have required a post-mortem examination to determine under what influence the snorer was, and as the visitor was not prepared to hold an autopsy on a man who might prove quarrelsome if awakened, he withdrew to the alley.

Cloe's new "hop joint" is located just across the alley from Wam Tie's place, and not in any respect cleaner or more inviting to strangers. The room used for smoking fronts on the alley, and is furnished with a pine board bunk evidently of the owner's own and only construction. Since the advent of the warm weather the attendance at the opium dens has decreased. The fiends visit the joints at odd times of the day and night in crowds, but no long r make the Chinese quarters their loafing-place, as was their custom during the early part of the winter. Among the new faces to be seen dodging into Chinese alley is that of Johnny Curtis, who gained some notoriety recently through his attempt to unite in himself the characteristics of Don Juan and the fabled religieux of Siberia.

The Druids.

The United Ancient Order of Druids, primarily, is of eastern origin. History speaks of it as an order of learned men amongst the ancient Celts, who left the parent hive in Asia at a very early period and settled in Western Europe. In Gaul (France) and Britain (England), for many centuries preceding the Christian era, and at the time of the invasion of those countries by the Romans, the Druids were the most prominent and powerful order. They presided over the religious celebrations of the people, and were the judges, legislators, philosophers, physicians and instructors of youth. The order first assumed its present character in England in the year 1781.

In 1830 it was introduced into America, and in 1839 was permanently established by the organizing of Washington lodge, No. 1, of New York.

The United Ancient Order of Druids is a moral, social and beneficial society. Its principles and teachings are derived from ancient Druidism, and are founded on reason and sound morality. They do not conflict with any of the established systems of religion, and are perfectly compatible with the peace and dignity of the commonwealth. No oaths are administered by the order, binding its members to any creed or jurisdiction; in becoming Druids they are still free men. The order has a firm footing in nearly all the states of the Union, in England, Ireland, Scotland, in the British colonies, Australia and in Germany. Its membership is thoroughly cosmopolitan in character.

ITS OBJECTS

are, to unite men together irrespective of nation, tongue or creed, for mutual protection and improvement; to foster among its members the spirit of fraternity and good fellowship, and by a well regulated system of dues and benefits, to provide for the relief of the sick and distressed, for the burial of the dead, and the protection and education of the widows and orphans. The name of "grove" is used by this order in the same sense as "lodge" or "council" is used in others, and as a commemoration of the ancient fathers who met in "groves of sacred oaks and lit their altar flame."

The grand grove of the United States is the fountain head and supreme authority of the order in this country.

The first grove instituted in Missouri was Missouri No. 1, on the 11th day of September A. D., 1848, and to-day there are thirty-seven groves in the state, with a membership of two thousand. There are seventeen groves in St. Louis, three of which work in the English language. The brethren of this city own a valuable and handsome property on Ninth and Market streets, which gives them a large income from its rental, and provides beautiful lodge rooms for some eighteen societies, and is in constant use.

A Crystal Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Nathan, of 2201 Adams street, celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding last Thursday evening. A reception was held from four to nine o'clock in the evening, a large number of their friends calling and extending their congratulations and hopes for a much longer period of happy married life to their host and hostess. After the reception a social gathering of their relatives and intimate friends was carried on into the small hours. It was a most enjoyable occasion for those present. Among the guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Birch, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Jones, Mrs. John Cantwell, Mrs. Charlotte Hunt, Miss Emma Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Seaman, Mrs. Wyman, of Cleveland, Ohio; Misses Nellie and Lillie Haynes, Mrs. O'Bannon, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. The Municipal Assembly.

In the council last evening Mr. Rowse offered a resolution instructing the committee on ways and means to consider the provisions of section 2, article 5, of the charter, referring to an increase of taxation on suburban property and to report on the subject. In the house Mr. Cornelius presented a petition of forty citizens of Victor street and the Gravois road, complaining of a filthy pond formed by drainage from a cattle-yard. The board of health had ignored the matter. It was referred to the committee on sanitary affairs. The bill prohibiting heavy driving over certain west end streets was reported from the committee on engrossed bills. It was amended so as to take effect after the reconstruction of Pine and Locust streets with ashphaltum. The bill was laid over, some opposition to it being manifested. Mr. Brennan moved that the laborers in the street department receive $1 75 per day in lieu of $1 25. The matter was referred to the committee on ways and means. Adjournment was taken till next Friday.

A DEFIANT CONTRACTOR.

The City Wants Caspar Stolle Produced in Court—Koester Divorce.

The probate court will adjourn this evening until July 16th, when it will remain in session for one week only. Last evening ex-Judge Chester H. Krum called upon the public administrator and submitted a settlement in the estate of Chas. W. Ford on the basis of $3,000, which he contended was the balance due the estate. The stocks are not included in this settlement. Mr. Lewis referred the settlement to Mr. John G. Chandler, his legal adviser, who likewise represents the Ford estate in this matter. It will be taken up in the probate court on the 16th of next month.

BELLIGERENT BARRISTERS.

There was a little sulphurous expression last evening in the probate court between James Taussig and Edmund A. B. Garesche. Counsel became warm in an argument over matters relative to an unsettled estate and compliments were freely exchanged. Judge Woerner rapped vigorously on his desk once or twice, and the bar of St. Louis was spared another belligerent scene.

City Counselor Bell appeared this morning in Court No. 2, before Judge Lubke, to complain of the action of Caspar Stolle, a contractor, who is quarrying and removing rock from city property, it is alleged, without official authority and in open defiance of an order of court issued yesterday restraining him from so doing. The court ordered an attachment to issue for production of Mr. Stolle at two o'clock to show cause why he should not be punished.

THE KOESTER DIVORCE.

A few days since Mrs. Mary Koester entered a suit for divorce in the circuit court against her husband, Antoine Koester. Ten minutes later she caused it to be dismissed, and it was understood that the parties had kissed and made up. This morning, however, the petition of the wife was brought in court again and filed, a signal of renewal of hostilities. This was an Irish-German alliance. Mary and Antoine were married here in May, 1867, and lived together until June 21, a few days since. Mrs. Koester alleges that she always behaved herself and was a kind, dutiful and affectionate wife. She alleges, however, that her husband was possessed of a violent, ungovernable temper; that he exhibited it too often to be agreeable, and that his treatment of her was cruel and barbarous to a degree. Not content with whipping her, he heaped insults of every kind upon her in the presence of others, to her bitter mortification and shame. One day last August he beat her with a hammer over the arms and wrists. On the 10th of November, last year, he used his hands and fists upon her, giving her a numerified beating. Mrs. Koester alleges that her husband denied her in the presence of friends, intimating that she was not his wife. He falsely accused her of having killed other people, but declared that she should not get away with him. One day he locked her up in the house; said he had killed two that day, and was determined to kill another, meaning her. He frequently called her a witch, a lizard, a beelzebub and other derisive names. On the 21st of the present month, being unable to tolerate this kind of thing any longer, Mrs. Koester left her husband. She asks for a decree of divorce and restoration of maiden name, Mary McGee.

A Slick Sell.

There is a big laugh going around at the expense of the proprietors of a pool-room located off of Sixth street, south of Pine. The heaviest expense in connection with a pool-room is the telegraphic dispatches. Each pool-room has a correspondent at the leading race tracks of the country, who, on the night preceding, sends the starters in the next day's races. The proprietors of the two pool-rooms off of Olive street, having reason to believe that their Sixth street colleague was at times copying and utilizing the information on their boards, put up, on Thursday night, "a stiff race" to be run at Brighton Beach yesterday; distance one and one-sixteenth miles, with the following entries: Boccacio 95, Centennial 105, Little Miten 107, Harriett 80, King Fan 105, George Stokes 105. The field was apparently one of the best selected imaginable, and great interest was taken in the outcome, the spectators becoming quite excited over the outlook. In due course of time the "starters" were posted in the Sixth street room, and in making up the combination board the race was made the third one. All day yesterday tickets were sold with the 1 1-16 race in, and book betting was quite lively. At two o'clock, at the other pool-rooms, the announcement was made to the patrons that no such race was to be run; that it was, in fact, a stiff. There was a deep disgust manifest at the Sixth street place when the news of the manner in which they had been trapped reached there, and a sad cashier set to work refunding the money on nearly four hundred combinations that had been sold.

Communication.

In order to call the attention of those similarly affected, permit me to report a remarkable cure in itself interesting to the public. I had on my arm an ulcerous, running sore, suppurating constantly, becoming every day larger and more offensive. I applied to several physicians until I nearly expended my little savings without attaining any good results. I was informed that mine was a bad case of Pyæmia, or blood-poisoning, and that my arm would have to be amputated. This seemed hard, indeed, to one in my position, who had no revenue, save that earned by his hands. The thought was indeed terrible! In my distress I tried many remedies to save my arm to no avail, until by the merest chance, I heard of a preparation called "chloridium" used as a desiufectant in the St. James Hotel, and also advertised as a cure for running sores. The virtues of the disinfectant as a remedy for bad odors of all kinds having been proven to my satistaction, I concluded to try its efficacy on my arm, with the most wonderful results. After a thorough washing and bathing of the wound with it, I found, after twenty-four hours, that it seemed better. Gaining hope I continued in its use, and now, after two weeks, my arm is not only entirely healed, but shows only a small scar. I have so informed Mr. C. T. Taylor, the general agent of Crane's Chloridium, at 314 Walnut street, of the great benefit I derived, and it is my wish that you give publicity to this voluntary statement in your widely read paper, that others may profit by my experience.

Respectfully yours, FERDINAND KADOWSKY, Night watchman, St. James hotel, St. Louis, Mo.

TRADE DOLLARS.

The Raid Against Them in New York—Their Status in This City.

"I see the New Yorkers have organized a raid against the trade dollar and that it is going to be generally shoved out of circulation," a POST-DISPATCH reporter remarked this morning to an official at the U. S. subtreasurer's office. The official acknowledged that he had read of the affair and said, when asked for information regarding the coin's status in this city: "There are quite a large number of them in circulation here, and from ten to twenty are presented here for redemption every day. Of course we reject them as they are not legal tender.

"How do the shop-keepers treat them when tendered?"

"Some of them refuse to take them, but many prefer to lose the discount on them rather than lose trade. These collect them, and as soon as they have a quantity on hand, dispose of them to brokers at a discount of one to two per cent. I see that bullion brokers are picking them up in New York at a discount of from ten to fifteen icents. This is fairly profitable work, considering that the trade dollar contains more silver than the daddy dollar."

"Do you think that the war upon them now going on in the East, will result in their being sent here in any quantities?"

"I hardly think so, as it is generally known among the brokers that the coin is in disfavor here, and that its occasional reception at par in the way of businss would soon be stopped if they began to be offered in greater quantities than at present."

At Wm. Barr & Co.'s dry goods store, the cashier, Mr. Wright, said:

"We have been taking the trade dollar at par, simply as a matter of accommodation to our customers. We get a few of them offered every day, and it is easier and more agreeable to all parties concerned for us to suffer the slight loss involved than to refuse them or charge a discount. We get rid of them at a discount of from one to two per cent."

"Is there any chance of these New York brokers trying to unload the trade dollars they are now accumulating in the west?"

"Possibly they might. If they were to do so then we would all refuse to take the coin under any circumstances. As it is, we try to make things as pleasant for our customers as possible. These punched coins are a nuisance, but if we should attempt to charge the proper discount on them they would be doubly more so. We lose from 10 to 20 per cent on all of it that we take in, but then there is some consolation in the fact that we are helping to get the stuff out of circulation. This reminds me that a street-broker, who heard I had a lot of it on hand, the other day came and made me an offer for it, which was so favorable that I accepted it. What he did with it I don't know, but a short time afterwards I heard of his getting into some trouble out on the plains, and I wouldn't be surprised if he had undertaken the introduction of punched coins into the simple community and had incurred their displeasure."

"That means, I suppose, that they hung him?"

"Well, no; I believe they took a milder view of his case than that, and simply requested him to transfer his establishment elsewhere. If there is any attempt made to get the trade dollars now being accumulated in the east into circulation in the west, we shall soon recognize the fact, and I shall take pains to notify the POST-DISPATCH. In the meantime we shall go on taking them as usual and standing the loss. As to what the other stores do I cannot say, but I believe the larger establishments follow our plan."

A Young Lady's Arrest.

Miss Clara Fox, a handsome young lady of about twenty summers, was up before Judge Dennison of the Second District police court this morning charged with trespass. The "case" had nothing in it to call for the young lady's arrest. She told a straightforward story and was discharged by Judge Dennison. It appears that she was invited by a gentleman friend, a saloon-keeper in the third district, to call and spend the evening with him. She accepted the offer and reached the saloon in due time. After spending an hour or more in social chat she intimated that she began to feel hungry, in answer to which her friend told her she could have nothing to eat. She remarked that she would go home, but her friend stepped outside and locked her in. She finally made her escape by going through an open window and out on the roof of the next building. She had been on the roof but a minute or two when she spied the majestic Officer McDaniels, of Capt. Frangel's staff. Fearing arrest, she tried to get off on to an adjoining building and get away, but the officer overhauled her and locked her up. Her trial this morning resulted in her discharge. Are there not too many cases made in the third district?

THE JOLIET PENITENTIARY.

Return of Governor Crittenden and Warden Willis.

Governor Crittenden and Warden Willis returned this morning from Joliet, where they have been for several days past inspecting the penitentiary with a view of obtaining suggestions for the improvement of the state penitentiary. The governor went direct to Jefferson City, but Warden Willis is stopping to-day at the Planters'. To a POST-DISPATCH reporter Mr. Willis said that he had always considered the prison at Joliet a fine one, but after seeing it he thinks it a model. The grounds were laid out according to a regular plan for prison buildings, and in point of comfort and conveniences for discipline cannot be excelled. One man stationed at the entrance can command a view of every cell in the penitentiary. The Jefferson penitentiary, the warden said, is built after no systematic plan, but has been added to from time to time as exigencies required, and hence it is impossible to make much improvement in the buildings, but in the rebuilding of the shops all good suggestions will be acted upon, and it is intended to supply nearly the whole penitentiary with steam-heating apparatus, to avoid danger of fire in the future. The visitors were met at Joliet by two commissioners of the penitentiary and by state officers, who showed them every kindness and courtesy. Warden Willis returns home to-night.

Coal Miners Leaving for Indian Territory—Marriage Record—Notes.

C. B. Odle, a prominent coal operator from Savanna, Indian territory, arrived here last evening in quest of miners. Mr. Odle states that numerous large mines in that locality are idle for the want of men to work the mines, although miners are being paid more than double the prices paid in other mining districts. He is willing to pay three and a half cents per bushel to all miners from now till September and four cents the remainder of the year. Several miners have already accepted his terms and will depart for Indian territory with him next week.

Vice-President Parker, of the Cairo Short Line railroad, having neglected to take advantage of the franchise granted the road to construct a belt railroad around Belleville, the officers elected by the original organizers of the movement will immediately proceed to lay the tracks, and expect to have the road in operation in less than thirty days. The new belt will start at the Crown flour mills and connect with the Louisville and Nashville and Illinois and St. Louis railroads. The officers are B. J. West, Don Turner and Edward Abend.

EAST ST. LOUIS.

Dallas Brown and Albert Goshen were each assessed $3 and costs on charges of disturbing the peace.

The numerous young friends of Miss Caldwell tendered her a surprise party at her residence on Missouri avenue last evening.

Joseph Catter was jailed last evening for being drunk and disorderly, and when arraigned before 'Squire Lynn this morning was fined $3 and costs.

John Keefe was arrested last evening on a warrant charging him with disturbing the peace, but furnished bond to appear in 'Squire Bunyan's court Monday morning.

The school picnic at Gross park to-day, is being very largely attended by the children, their parents and friends. The police attendance is sufficient to eject all disturbers, and disgraceful rows which attended the school picnic in the past are not likely to occur to-day.

The river commissioners of St. Louis, accompanied by the mayor of East St. Louis and city officials of both towns, inspected the Illinois river bank from Venice to Cahokia this afternoon to become acquainted with the weak points and make preparations to guard against future inundations.

Patrick Shea occupies a cell in the police station on the charges of robbery and carrying concealed weapons. Shea will have a preliminary examination before 'Squire Bunyan, Monday, when the police expect to prove that he entered Albert Woertz's saloon and stole $18. Shea was armed with a revolver when arrested.

Juan Bacca, claiming to be a stock dealer from New Mexico, relates a very sensational story of his experience with two East St. Louisans. Arriving at the St. Clair avenue crossing on the Wabash train early yesterday morning he alighted and inquired the direction to the nearest hotel. Two young men with small felt hats and tight pants with very large springs at the shoes volunteered to act as guides. After walking about two miles over a new embankment he accepted a cigar from one of his guides and commenced to smoke. The cigar was drugged, and when he recovered from his stupor, twelve hours later, he was minus his gold watch and chain, a very valuable diamond pin, $200 in currency and several thousand dollars in checks. The story was related by the Mexican to the city attorney and two police officers last evening, but neither thought it worth investigating, or even reporting to the chief. Marshal Halloran knew nothing of the robbery at noon to-day.

Four Courts Notes.

To-day warrants against the following parties were returned to the court of criminal correction: H. H. Coons and John F. Richards, charged with forcible entry and detainer by W. J. Robinson; Abe Backus, assault and battery; Frank Heins, charged with stealing a cow from Adam Diechmiller, and John Kelley and John James charged with stealing a valise from H. R. McCann.

An infant child of Ferdinand Kuhnline died suddenly this morning at Fifth and Hurck streets, Carondelet.

James Fitzpatrick, a four-year-old boy, was found on Olive street last night and turned over to the police.

Well-Fixed.

This morning between 4 and 5 o'clock Officer Niergelman found a well-dressed man at Eighth and Olive streets. He told the officer that he had been robbed of a gold watch and had luckily escaped with his money. The man said his name was Sanford Womser of Arkansas Valley, Ark. He was evidently suffering from temporary insanity, and was taken to the Four Courts where Officers Shaw and Norris found $3,365 67 and two notes for $300 each in his pockets. Womser was locked up and his friends notified.

RAILROADS.

Pullman Cars on the Pacific Slope—Personal Notes, Etc.

The Iron Mountain has on the way to St. Louis a special train of twenty-five car loads of staves.

The first car of Georgia watermelons over the L. & N. came in this morning, and the boys have all enjoyed bad health ever since.

The A. T. & S. F. has sent to St. Louis for five hundred laborers to work on its extensions and the repairs that are being made on the main line and branches.

The Keokuk and St. Louis railroad to-day are putting the finishing touches on the new bridge over the Cuivre river, made necessary by the washout during the flood, and all trains are run without transfer again.

Why is the O. & M. ticket office like the penitentiary? Because all the inmates have shaved heads and wear stripes. They all, from Phillips down to the general western agent, went out and bought seersucker suits yesterday.

Mr. C. Collis, L. & N. ticket agent, is in the city to-day. It is suspected that he came over to see a good game of ball this afternoon, and then go back this evening with the Grand avenue club, which is to play the Riversides of Evansville to-morrow.

The firm name of Fruin & Co., the heaviest railroad contractors of the West, has been changed to Fruin, Bamberger & Co., through the admission into the partnership of Mr. Patrick Bamberger. The change was brought about by the very great increase in the firm's business.

The school girls from Staunton, Va., who passed through the city yesterday for their Texas homes, came in on the Air Line, and not, as announced, via the O. & M. These ladies have until this year always made their homeward trips over some other road, and the Air Line people are very proud of their proselytes.

L. D. Voak, general live stock agent of the Gould roads, returned from Kansas City this morning. He says that the movement of cattle this season by rail will be heavier than ever before, but later than for many seasons. He does not think that Texas cattle will be shipped in any quantity much before next August.

Fred W. Paramore, George W. Ristine and others of the Texas and St. Louis railway staff are out over the line on their final inspection tour previous to the opening of the road to business. It is expected that everything will be completed and St. Louis able to give Texas an iron-rail shake over the T. & St. L. by the 1st of August at the farthest.

The "Burlington route" fan is again waving everywhere, and consequently the merits of that great route are receiving no little attention from old and young alike. The order for 100,000 of these wind generators was given to Chinese merchants early last fall, and the Q people here are just now receiving the unbroken packages containing the genuine article.

On to-morrow, the first of July, the Pullman palace car company assumes charge of all the sleeping car service of the Central and Southern Pacific railroads and operated lines. Heretofore the sleeping cars of these roads have been under the control and management of the roads themselves, and the cars used were inferior to the standard Pullman now in use, although having many Pullman attachments and improvements.

The following modest request for a family pass was received by a St. Louis railroad man to-day and is only a very ordinary illustration of the unmitigated gall and impudence of which people the least entitled to pass privileges are entitled:

QUINCY, ILL., June 28, 1883.

DEAR SIR:

I wish that you please and issue me a pass over the Vandalia line, good from St. Louis to Indianapolis and return, for myself, wife and three children. You promise me a pass some eight years ago for a favor of me, so I hope that you please and send me the pass now.

Late this afternoon it was learned that six or seven immigrants, fresh from the old country, who had bought tickets over the Baltimore and Ohio route at New York for a point on the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe railway, were stranded at the Union depot, penniless and unable to proceed farther, because of the refusal of the Iron Mountain railway to honor their tickets. If the tickets read to a point on any other line but the G. C. & S. F., it would be all right and the innocent immigrant could finish his journey uninterrupted. But the G. C. & S. F. has been boycotted by the Gould roads, and in order to carry this petty quarrel the poor immigrant far from friends, penniless and unaccustomed to the ways of the country, must be made the sufferer.

Col. T. H. Wicks, superintendent of the St. Louis division, to which all the cars on the Pacific roads have been added, is now in San Francisco perfecting arrangements for the starting of the service to-morrow, under his, the new, management. As the runs are now arranged sixty-five cars will be required for actual use all the time. The old cars in use will be continued until new ones can be built. The construction of these new cars, which, by the way, are all to have the buffet attachment that has become so popular on the day run of the Missouri Pacific between St. Louis and Kansas City, is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, and before many months the sleeping-car service of all the Pacific roads will be entirely new and of the latest and most approved pattern. The runs to be inaugurated to-morrow by Col. Wickes are as follows: San Francisco to New Orleans, 2,500 miles; San Francisco to Ogden and Omaha, 1,916 miles; San Francisco to Reno, Nev.; San Francisco to Los Angeles, Cal.; San Francisco to Madera, Cal.; San Francisco to Monterey; New Orleans to Houston and Houston to San Antonio. It is the intention to thoroughly reorganize the service on the Pacific, Pulmanize it in every particular, and to that end old experienced men are being sent there as fast as they can be spared from other divisions. As soon as the cars can be built a run from Kansas City to Salt Lake City by Cheyenne, a distance of 1,310 miles, is to be started. A system of coupon tickets is also to be adopted, by which passengers making these long journeys can purchase their berths clear through at the starting place, and thereby have the advantage of through rates. In this connection it is not out of place to refer to the statement of a local paper here, some days since, that the sleeping car run on the Wabash between St. Louis and Boston is the longest in existence. It is not the longest in existence by 1,287 miles, as the run between 'Frisco and New Orleans, which was in operation at the time the statement was made, is 2,496 miles long, while the Boston run is but 1,209 in length. There are a number of sleeper runs longer by hundreds of miles than the Wabash to Boston.

Street Improvements.

ST. LOUIS, June 29, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

It has often occurred to me to inquire why a little common sense and thoroughness should not be applied to the construction of our streets; and as this is a matter in which every citizen, and especially every tax-payer, is practically interested, I hope it will not be thought out of place for a plain man to offer, through your columns, some practical suggestions.

The evils of the present system we can all see and feel, and the local press is burdened with satirical or complaining comment. It is true that our streets, for the most part, are in a quite execrable and provoking state of ill-repair, and that with all this they are a weary burden to our municipal treasury. But I do not refer to these things, but rather to the faults of their original construction. The ideal plan seems to be to make the street the segment of a rather large cylindrical column—very high in the center and sinking by an abrupt decline into the gutters. In consequence of this, some six or eight feet on each side are practically useless for purposes of travel. True, a buggy or carriage can manage to stand there, unpleasantly tilted, with the occupants lying on each other, or sustaining an erect position by a severe and exhausting strain until a better level can be attained. Now, this is usually unkind to the average citizen and especially to the delicate lady, as well as practically wasteful. The surface of the street, on the contrary, should be so nearly level that one occupying a vehicle could hardly perceive any inclination. An elevation of three inches in the center in a street of thirty-six feet from curb to curb—the usual width of our streets, I believe—would amply serve all practical purposes. It will be objected, of course, that this would not allow a sufficient fall to secure good drainage, but I hope to be able to show with your kind permission, that the end of perfect drainage can be more effectually secured by the plan I take the liberty of suggesting, than by the steep inclination of the street to either side which is now the rule.

In the first place the whole street, and not the gutter alone, should constitute the drain, and every heavy rainfall would then cleanse it of all accumulated impurities. For this purpose the surface of the street should be from six to eight inches lower than the pavement, and the latter should be extended over the space, now wasted, say six or eight feet on each side; and this space might serve for the road-bed of the street-car lines. The sewer and the water and gas conduits might all lie under this space of six or eight feet on either side, and thus, when a street was once made, it need never be broken up for the necessary changes and repairs in these departments. The cars would thus be easily and perfectly accessible from the door of every shop and dwelling, and the carriages sufficiently so, while there would be no competion between these vehicles, as at present, for the right of way, and no more wrenching off of wheels and breaking of axles by the grip of the inexorable and abominable rails, which have already so nearly ruined, for carriage passways, some of the best streets in the city. Besides, the whole expense of making and keeping in repair the sections of pavement devoted to the cars would be laid upon the companies running them, who would feel this to be no hardship, because they would have the exclusive use of what they paid for, while the city would be an annual gainer from the saving of many thousand dollars.

Of course, again, many people will cry, "Visionary and impracticable." But just look at the matter a moment and see if anything can be more reasonable and practicable. The average street, as said above, is thirty-six feet wide. About half of it, and the best half, too, taken right out of the middle, is spoiled by car-rails and travel, and only those precipices which overlook the gulfs of the gutters are left for carriageways. That is the present lovely arrangement. Now, take six feet on each side for the tramways, elevating them to the level of the pavements of which they will constitute a part, and you have a clear space of twenty-four (24) feet for unobstructed and pleasant driving. And what could mortal man, or any other man, desire more or better? The car-tracks and cars could be proportionally narrowed, and the latter have openings for exit and entrance only on one side, which would be all that would then be required. The car-tracks would give at the intersection of other streets, first, the needed elevation for crossings, which, being protected by iron rails would not be exposed to damage by passing vehicles, and would be dry and pleasant in any weather, and not, as now, a slush of mud with every passing shower, or street sprinkler.

On this plan, without any substantial damage, but rather a real benefit and convenience, we might have cars on every street of the city and hear no more complaints of streets being spoiled by their tracks.

As a foundation for all streets, probably the Telfourd is the best. This might be covered with granite, asphalt blocks, gum blocks a la Nicholson, a gravel mixed with asphalt. Of this gravel the Meremac would furnish an inexhaustible supply, and the city's carriage-ways would all be as pleasant as those we enjoy so much in Tower Grove park. And the sufficient protection of those perfect streets could be secured by an ordinance requiring all vehicles to have tires proportioned to their weight, say from one to seven inches.

It will not be expected that in an article like this, which is merely tentative and suggestive, I should refer explicitly to the numerous details and objections which will readily occur to every reader. It is sufficient to say in this connection, that explanation and amplification, an abundant store, can be readily furnished to any who shall be sufficiently interested to call for them. Very respectfully,

G. S. WALKER, M. D.,
2809 Washington Avenue.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLIONS.

That is About the Shrinkage in Value of Crops in Fifteen Days.

Mr. R. H. Nicol, of the Culver commission company, tabulated, this morning, the depreciation in value of the leading crops during the latter half of June. The prices used are the closing figures at Chicago on the 14th and 28th June, respectively. The production based upon is from the most reliable estimates. The following table gives estimated production, shrinkage in price since June 14, and aggregate loss on each crop:

Wheat, 440,000,000 bushels; decline 12 cents; loss	$ 52,800,000
Corn, 1,607,000,000 bushels; decline 6 cents; loss	107,020,000
Oats, 475,000,000 bushels; decline, 9 cents; loss	42,750,000
Pork, 12,738,747 barrels; decline, $2 15; loss	27,388,306
Lard, 409,874,897 pounds; decline, 2 cents; loss	8,197,497
Cotton, 3,479,750,000 pounds; decline, 18⅔ points; loss	6,286,740
Total shrinkage	$244,440,543

The split points in cotton come from averaging the July, August and September quotations.

This wholesale depreciation is the more surprising when it is remembered the 15th of June was set by many leading operators as the date when prices would begin climbing.

It will pay you to visit this tribe, if you have the "huntup."

DINER DE LA MORT.

Remarkable Suicide of a French Officer at a Parisian Restaurant.

Paris Dispatch in the Evening Telegram.

Last evening, about nine o'clock, the attention of the crowds of promenaders in the Quartier des Pyramides was attracted by a suicide, accomplished in a manner very eccentric, even for a great city like Paris.

A gentleman, neatly and respectably dressed, entered the restaurant "John Bull," at the corner of the Rue des Pyramides and the Place Jeanne d'Arc, and ordered an elaborate dinner. He consumed the delicacies set before him with evident relish, and after each dish or glass of wine he jotted down a few observations in a note-book. He completed his repast tres tranquillement with the satisfaction of a man who had achieved a thoroughly first-rate dinner. He then called for a petit verre of fine champagne and an excellent Havana cigar. He sipped the former and lighted the latter, and finally told the waiter to bring his bill.

The waiter turned his back, and the gentleman who had dined so agreeably removed the cigar from his lips and inserted in his mouth the muzzle of a revolver. He fired four bullets through his brain.

A doctor was called, and the dead man was searched. They found absolutely nothing in his pockets except his notebook.

On the first page of this were written in large, bold characters the words, "Diner de la mort; mes dernieres impressions." Then followed a critique on each dish, conceived in the style and unity of idea of an accomplished connoisseur.

In the end he expressed his regret that he, an ex-officer of the French army, and decorated at that, should die as a malhonnete homme, after having striven during the war to fall "sous le coup d'une balle Prussienne."

AN ARIZONA WONDER.

A Natural Bridge in Tonto Basin Which Surpasses that in Virginia.

From the Arizona Gazette.

Very few of our citizens are aware of the existence of a natural bridge in Arizona, which in grandeur and beauty of structure fully equals, perhaps surpasses, the great natural bridge in Virginia. Yet such a bridge exists, and may be reached by a journey of less than one hundred miles from Phœnix. The trip is an easy one, for the wagon road comes within two miles of the bridge, and the tourist who turns his steps in that direction will consider himself well repaid for his trouble.

During the recent trip through Tonto basin and its numerous tributary valleys I found myself within seven miles of this great natural curiosity, and of course availed myself of the opportunity to visit. We were at the Gowan mine, where Dr. Jones is running a ten stamp quartz mill at the head of the east fork of the Verde, and saddling our horses one lazy afternoon, we soon left seven miles of mountain trail behind us, and found ourselves on the summit of a cypress-crowned mountain whose steep eastern slope descended abruptly five hundred feet to a cosey little valley, hemmed in on the opposite side by an abrupt precipice of still greater height. Descending with difficulty, we found ourselves on a large flat, with an area of probably sixty acres with cultivated fields, in which corn was sprouting, and potatoes and corn were already well grown.

We stood on the crown of the bridge and did not know it, for this beautiful garden patch is fringed on all sides with shrubbery and graceful trees, and one has to go one hundred yards south and descend into a precipitous canon before he is aware of the huge tunnel which nature has cut through the solid rock beneath his feet. This bridge was discovered three years ago by Mr. John Gowan, who still lives on it, and whose smiling face we soon discovered, as he approached us from the camp, under a beautiful grove of oak and walnut trees.

We found in Mr. Gowan a most hospitable host and an untiring guide through the wonders of the bridge beneath, and being a sincere lover of nature and a very close observer, he added greatly to the pleasure of our trip by pointing out various curiosities and freaks of nature, which might pass unnoticed by the careless eye. We ascertained the next day, by the aid of a long fish line, that the crown of the bridge at its southern spring was 168 feet, and the span was 80 feet. Its total width up and down the creek is about 150 yards. About eight feet from its southern edge, exactly in the center of the arch, is a natural hole, cut into the interior, and by looking down this, a bird's eye view is obtained of the bed of Pine creek, far below at a depth of sixty-eight feet. But a full idea of the grandeur of this arch is not obtained until one stands beneath it and looks aloft. The gigantic limestone walls spring in perfect curves to the perfect arch above, and the fluted columns meeting in the semi-obscurity above reminds the beholder of the interior of some vast cathedral. The stream which winds among the huge bowlders that strew the bottom, lies here and there in deep dark pools of unknown depth, and its precipitous sides are pierced by caves and grottos whose numerous windings and alleyways lead one far into the bowels of the mountains. Many of these have been explored, and many more have never been trodden by the foot of the white man; though from arrow-heads, pottery, and scraps of matting, mingled with bones and charred wood, we can see that our Indian brother has long been acquainted with these retreats. These grottos are all hung with beautiful stalactites, which take all imaginable forms, and any article, whether of wood or other soft substance, if placed beneath the streams which constantly trickle from the roofs of these caverns, will in a short time become petrified. We gathered several petrified pine cones and branches of trees, which were as hard as rock, and as perfect in form and outline as if they had lately fallen from the trees.

OLD JOHN.

A Sad Commentary on the Advantages of Extensive Theft.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

"Uncle John," said a prominent citizen, addressing an old negro, "I suppose you have heard that your old friend Dorsey has been acquitted?"

"How 'quitted, boss?"

"Why, don't you know that he got into trouble with his star-route mail contracts and was tried before the courts?"

"Neber hearn a bref ob it afore."

"Well, it was charged that he and others had cheated the government."

"An' da tuck him to de court-house, did da?"

"Yes, and tried him."

"Reckin he got a big lot er money frum de government?"

"Yes, a large sum."

"An' da let him off?"

"Yes, acquitted him."

"Dat de way it is. Yer ken take money from de people an' cheat de president, an' beat de gubner outen money, an' git out all right, dat is ef yer is a white man, but jes' let a nigger steal a hog, I don't keer how po' an' mangy de hog is, an' da slap him in de penitentiary. No matter how hungry a nigger is; no matter how his chillun is cryin' fur suthin' ter eat, jes' let him put his han's on a white man's shoat an' away he goes. But de white man ken beat de guberment outen money an' be a bigger man arterwards."

"You talk as though you have had experience, Uncle John."

"'Sperience! Wall, take keer when yer talks 'bout 'sperience. I'se been in the penitentiary too many times not ter hab 'sperience. Dat's all I is got, boss. One night I tuck a little ole shoat outen a pen an' dinged ef de white folks wan't down ter my house 'fore breakfas' in de mawnin, an' I tole dem dat de hog was in de pen, dyin' wid cholera, an' dat I wanted ter move him, ter keep him from smellin' bad 'roun' de white folks; but da sont me ter de pen fur a year. De nex' time I stole a pig from a rich man. I didn't think he'd keer, an' de naixt mawnin' I went ober an' tole him what a joke I'd played on him, but he slapped me in de pen fur a year. Arter I served my time I went ter de polls ter vote one day, an' dis rich white man he come up an' say: 'Dat nigger can't vote, 'case he's been in de pen.' Dat caused me ter lose $5. At a 'lection shortly arter dis de rich man was a canerdate. He comes ter me an' says: 'Who's yer gwineter vote fur?' 'I can't vote,' s'I, 'fur I'se been in de pen.' 'Oh, well,' says he, 'I'se talked wid de gubnor, an' he says dat ef yer wantster vote fer me yer kin vote.'"

"If Dorsey had stolen a hog he would have gone to the penitentiary, wouldn't he?"

"Gone dar, sho'. I ken send de gubner ter de pen ef I prubes dat he stole a hog, 'an it seems ter me dat it's a mighty easy matter ter prube dat he has stole one."

Did William Tell Exist?

From the New York Herald.

As the restoration of the old Tell chapel in Switzerland was yesterday declared to be completed, we are likely to hear more of the troublesome question whether the hunter of Burglen was mythical or historical. There is a pernicious school of modern criticism which persists in shaking popular beliefs. Did Cambronne at Waterloo cry, "The guard dies, but does not surrender?" Did the French at Fontenoy invite the English to fire first? Is the story of William Tell copied from an Arran legend and the chronicles of Saxo Grammaticus? We confess we do not know. In these matters there ought to be a law of limitations. Inquisitive historians have no right to meddle with beliefs which the world has entertained for centuries.

Day after day the quay of Dundalk, county Louth, is filled with poor emigrants preparing for embarkation; 394 left in April, 235 in May and 300 in June. The emigrants are mostly young men and women from the agricultural districts.

It also contains some valuable cooking receipts. The cover is a very neatly executed piece of work, and is printed in bright colors. A copy will be mailed to any address on receipt of one three-cent stamp. Address the Excelsior Manufacturing Company, St. Louis.

Cupid's Captives.

On Thursday evening at nine o'clock Miss Nettie Kuhn, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kuhn, was married to Mr. William G. Orr, son of Mr. William Orr of this city. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Porteus, in the presence of a large number of friends of the happy pair. The halls and parlors were handsomely decorated with flowers, and a fine orchestra concealed under the stairway played the Wedding March as the bridal party moved down the stairway, the bridesmaids, with their attendant groomsmen, leading the way. The bride was elegantly attired in a robe of pure white ottoman silk, en traine, with garniture of point duchess lace, the surplice corsage was frilled with the same lace, of which the sleeves were also composed. The veil of illusion, confined to the hair by sprigs of orange blossoms, combined with narcissus, was looped over the train by cordons of the same flowers. After the ceremony the banquet was served, consisting of all the delicacies of the season, the table being beautifully decorated with silver and glass, fruits and flowers. During the progress of the supper speeches were made by Messrs. Daniel C. Young, G. W. Kurtzborn and Judge Gottschalk. After the repast the dance began and continued until after 4 o'clock. The bridal couple were the recipients of a great many beautiful and costly presents. Mr. and Mrs. Orr left on Friday morning for Saratoga, where they will spend their honeymoon.

SUMMERFIELD, ILL., June 29.—A few weeks since a man of attractive appearance and cultivated manners, giving his name as Henry Koehler, and claiming to be a retired clergyman, made application for membership to the pastor of one of the churches. The slight suspicion in which he was held at first was soon dispelled through his good behavior. In a short time he succeeded in gaining the confidence of the entire church community. Claiming to have a trip east in contemplation, he drew quite a handsome sum to be used in replenishing his rather dilapidated wardrobe and to serve as traveling expenses. CARONDELET JOTTINGS.

The Lewis furnace is again in full blast.

The Jupiter furnace was fired up again last night.

The Carondelet delegates to the prohibition convention have returned and report it a 'big thing.'

The Chouteau will land at five o'clock this afternoon at the foot of Elwood street to give the Knights of Pythias an opportunity to go on the excursion.

Seven cases graced the police docket this morning. Exposure of person, making use of the foot of Loughborough avenue for a dump, and tramps made up the list. Fines, ranging from $10 to $25, were imposed.

At the Odd Fellows' hall association meeting last night, it was ordered that assessment No. 9, be called in, also that stockholders in arrears for former assessments be notified to pay. In case there are prompt responses, building the hall will at once commence.

The stench from Arsenal street north for several blocks is absolutely sickening, and an extra supply of handkerchiefs are requisite for the use of railroad passengers. For a year past the sloughs and low places along the road have been the receptacles for all manner of filth, and now as the water recedes the air is loaded with frightful odors.

Charles Mergentheimer, salesman at Lowenstein's, has a rare collection of postage-stamps in his scrap-book, comprising three thousand different kinds, and all said to be genuine. He obtained many of these before leaving Germany, and has continued the work since by correspondence and otherwise. In the collection are samples of the first English postage-stamp, issued in 1840.

Several French ladies are again at war and intend to ventilate one another's characters in the police court. Patrick Leahy, Esq., is employed for the defendants, and not deeming himself sufficiently versed in the language, asked for a continuance this morning for one week. This was granted and the lawyer at once went back to the study of "French without a master."

The alarm given last night from box 419, corner of Fifth street and Robert avenue, is something of a mystery. The company promptly responded, but, on reaching the place, could find no signs of fire, and everybody in the vicinity appeared to be asleep. At the grocery where it is kept it was ascertained that the key had not been out of the house. By telephone it was learned from the city that 419 was struck there, and it is, therefore, evident that someone has a key who has no business, or if properly invested with one, is using it without cause.

Nearly twelve months ago, John Holland, nephew of Mrs. D. M. Hoag, fell from a freight car and lost a leg. Yesterday he went to the general office of the Iron Mountain road, told them who he was and said he lost his leg while working for the company, "but I have not brought any claim against the company, nor do I intend to, but can't you give me something to do." The appearance of the boy and his frank way of talking created a most decided impression in his favor, and, after a few minutes more conversation, John was told that the company would take charge of him, send him to school for a time, then qualify him for a telegraph operator and give him an office. John is happier than he has been for twelve months.

A few weeks ago an item appeared in this department relative to a book agent claiming $18 for the history of St. Louis, when but $8 had been promised by the subscribers. Since the publication the delivery agents have kept clear of Carondelet until yesterday, when one with a colored driver drove up in fine style to the residence of Mr. Eugene Hiltenbrand. The books were deposited in the house, then the contract with "teen" added to the eight and eighteen dollars demanded. But Mr. Hiltenbrand had not forgotten the amount promised, and remarked, "I read in the POST-DISPATCH about that and you are trying to swindle me, and I will have you arrested." At this the agent rushed for his buggy, and, jumping in, drove off at a rapid rate, leaving the books behind him.

SKIPPED OUT.

Disappearance of a Bogus Firm Who Were Doing a Large Business.

Farmers in Illinois, Iowa and Missouri are anxiously writing to town asking for particulars concerning the produce commission house of H. Stark & Co., purporting to do business here and in Cleveland, O. One of these, a Mr. J. E. Tully of Xenia, Ill., sent an inquiry regarding the house to Hamilton, Brown & Co. of this city, who, after making an investigation which aroused their suspicions, turned the case over to Mr. George W. Cole, of the Merchants' detective association, who last Wednesday visited the pretended commission house at 508 Elm street and found that its premises consisted of a single room, where four empty egg-cases were the only furniture on hand, which was in charge of a man named Dudley, who claimed to be the manager, and said that Mr. Stark had gone to the depot with a buggy and would not be on hand until eleven o'clock the following morning. Wm. Cole stated that he was a butter-dealer from Mexico, Mo., and asked for prices, but the manager did not seem anxious to talk business. The next morning Mr. Cole called to see Mr. Stark, but the bird had flown. The bogus concern had been in operation for almost five weeks, and had gathered in between $1,000 and $2,000 in their brief career. Letters which are coming in, complaining of want of remittances, showing that they had begun to establish quite an extensive business connection. The "jim crow" firm had gained the confidence of the agriculturist by offering from 1 to 2 cents more than the market price for butter, and by having a motto attached to all their stationery, reading, "Keep to a reliable house and a good market." The duped countrymen will probably take the firm's advice in the future, even though they are not promised impossible prices as an inducement.

TANTALUS.

A king of the past was Tantalus:
The gods who held court on Olympus
Invited him once to their tables,
To dwell in their glory and sunshine.

He thought he now was their equal;
And fired by brimmed tankards of nectar
His mind was disturbed and unbalanced,
Far better he ne'er had been lifted.

He worshiped his children and loved them;
But mightier far his great passion,
His desire for the greatest god's favor—
A child, his beloved one, he slaughtered.

The furies were gathered, and drove him
Down deep in the hells for his rashness,
To stay till the dead should be quickened,
To suffer in hunger and torment.

And the gods still dwell on Olympus;
They need not man's foolish performance;
But he who seeks truth and acts justly
May freely partake at their tables.

SPORTING NEWS.

Umpire Kelly Sent to Louisville—Base Ball News—Gossip.

The Browns and Athletics will come together to-day at Sportsman's park, and the greatest interest in the contest prevails. The home team will present their strongest nine. Strief will be at the second bag. McGinniss will pitch and Deasley catch. Mullane goes to left field. The Athletics play the same nine as on Thursday. The only other change is that Mr. John Kelly will not umpire, Mr. Daniels taking his place. The objection to Mr. Kelly's rulings in the last game were so manifest that Chris Von der Ahe telegraphed to secretary Williams, of the American association, requesting a change. Mr. Williams promptly telegraphed to Kelly to report at Louisville, and he left last night for that place. Daniels missed the train, and a special was ordered for him so that he could be on time to-day.

A Leap into a Colorado River.

From the Silverton Democrat.

Frank Day, who came up from Durango the first of the week on horseback, met with an adventure which undoubtedly will leave an indelible impression on his mind. He waited at Needleton until the noon train passed down, and being informed that no other train was on the road he took the track in preference to the trail, had ridden a mile or more, when happening to look up, to his astonishment he saw the construction train going around the curve and but a few rods distant. A wall of rock to the left and the river to the right and twenty feet below. A moment decided, and lifting his mare by the bridle he sent the spurs into her sides and jumped her down into the foaming water. Fortunately no injuries were sustained.

The idea of the invitation on the part of the First church people is, that it may lead to a union of the two bodies, but that object has in no way a place in the invitation as formulated.

FAILURES FOR A HALF YEAR.

A Marked Increase in the Number and Liabilities.

NEW YORK, June 30.—The approximate figures of the business failures over the entire country for the half year ending to-day, compiled by R. G. Dun & Co., indicate a marked increase in the number and extent of the liabilities as compared with the corresponding period of the two previous years. For the first six months of 1881 the failures were 2,862; for the first six months of 1882, 3,597; for the first half of 1883, 4,637. The liabilities show a greater increase. In 1881 the liabilities of the first six months were $40,000,000. In 1882 they were $50,000,000. For the first six months of 1883 they reached $66,000,000. The increase in the liabilities for the last half year is attributable largely to speculative failures in the west, but even deducting the indebtedness springing from this cause, the increase in failures and liabilities is very marked. It is noticeable, however, that during the second quarter of the year the mercantile disasters are much less than in the first quarter, in which a bulk of the increase occurs, so that it is possible the worst part of the year has been got over. Reports as to the business outlook from ninety-seven trade centers indicate a more hopeful feeling as to the future.

THE DEFAULTING TREASURER.

M. T. Polk in Court—A Glimpse of the Prisoner.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 30.—A prominent lawyer of this city who accompanied me into the court-room where ex-Treasurer Polk is on trial declares a doubt of Davidson county furnishing twelve men qualified to sit in the jury-box. Out of 300 only three have been passed. The prisoner was the cynosure of the eyes of several hundred spectators as he hobbled upon his wooden leg into court and took a chair alongside that of his leading counsel. His face bespeaks an exceedingly weak but never a vicious character. His full, watery blue eyes, effeminate mouth and chin, and small, delicately-pointed nose, all indicate him as devoid of decision or firmness. His ruddy complexion and puffiness of face denote high living. Despite the marked greyness (which appears to be premature) of hair, mustache and imperial, he looks the picture of a dependent child leaning upon its parents, as he bends now and then toward one or the other of his advocates. The latter, Messrs. East, Collier and Childress, are men of years, legal acumen and forcible determination, who will contest every inch of ground. The attorney-general, Mr. Montgomery, is a brilliant young lawyer of thirty-five, and his assistant, Mr. Dodd, appointed by Governor Bate, scarcely older; so, even if a jury is obtained, the prosecution will find itself jostled at every step in the proceedings, and the trial is likely to consume several weeks.

THE PLAYERS.

The Three Black Cloaks at Uhrig's Cave.

Gossip Notes About the Doings of Actors and Actresses.

Such a hit has been made at Uhrig's Cave by the "Three Black Cloaks" that it has been decided to keep it on for another week. The weather has been more than usually propitious to the cave management of late, and the pleasure of combining such really good music and genuine merriment as is provided in Buculossi's delightful work, with the cool breezes which play about under the foliage in this popular-evening resort has been enjoyed by thousands. Mr. Ford's capital company are gaining in public favor with each performance, and, after the demand for their latest production has been abated, their patrons will see them to at least as good advantage in Planquette's new comic opera of "Rip Van Winkle," which is in that melodious master's most catching vein, a fact which is attested by its run of 200 nights in London.

Nothing definite has been yet decided upon at the Pickwick, of whose next performances due notice will be given.

NOTES.

Mme. Janauscheck has scored a success in San Francisco.

Den Thompson is summering on his farm at Swansea, N. H.

Mr. Colville wants to sell an interest in "Taken From Life" for next season.

Miss Maude Harrison is summering at Staten Island, and is in very delicate health.

Atkinson's Jollities are doing a good business at the Princess of Wales theater, Liverpool, England.

Gus Mortimer has bought a villa at Narragansett bay, which he and Mrs. Mortimer will occupy this summer.

Topsy Venn has purchased "Furnished Rooms" from C. H. Smith, and started from Boston to play over the eastern circuit.

Thomas Casselli, the tenor, who went to Australia with Emily Melville, died in the city of Brisbane, Queensland, on May 15.

Gustave Frohman has left Boston for Winnipeg, Man., with a view of "routing" the extreme northwest for Madison square attractions.

They are having some long runs in London where "The Rivals" has passed its 200 performances at the Vaudeville, and "Iolanthe" its 200th at the Savoy.

McKee Rankin has been engaged as leading man at the Union Square theater, consequently he will play against himself next season in New York.

When "The Rajah" goes on the road, it will have H. M. Pitt and Marion Elmore and members of the present cast, and a special car for the original scenery.

Miss Jennie Calef will not star next year in "M'liss," but has had a new piece written for her entitled "Little Muffets." Andrew Waldron will be her manager.

Miss Grace Logan, of Mary Anderson's company, will sail for Europe July 7. She will be the guest of her sister, Olive Logan, and may appear with Miss Anderson in London.

Clara Louise Kellogg will follow her usual custom and spend a part of the season at Saratoga, where she will probably give one or more concerts at the United States hotel.

Rose Wood is spending the summer with her husband and children at their pretty little cottage in Ocean Grove, N. J. She will travel next season again as a member of Mr. Joseph Jefferson's combination.

Mr. William E. Hayden is a very happy man. His wife presented him with a beautiful little girl last Tuesday. They are sojourning at the highlands of Navesink, and are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Webster.

Miss Lillian Spencer has just lost her father, Dr. Geo. W. Spencer, a well-known dentist at Pittsburg, Pa. She will spend the summer at her country place, Claverack on the Hudson. Her father's will leaves her $35,000.

Miss Mary Anderson is in London, and was about to leave for Paris at last advices. She intends taking a few private perfecting lessons from Requier, the eminent professor of the conservatoire. She opens in London on September 1.

A London correspondent says: We hear a great deal in advance of Miss Lillian Russell, who is shortly to make her appearance here. She has been engaged by Mr. Alexander Henderson, of the Comedy theater, and much is expected of her.

The beginning of a movement in England against the extortionate charges of solo performers is to be noted in the Richter concerts in London, in which the interest is made to consist in the proper performance of notable works rather than exceptional displays by virtuosi.

Miss Mittens Willett has been engaged to play leading business with the John McCullough company next season. This is a well-deserved promotion, as Miss Willett has been a member of the company for the past five seasons, having begun at the very bottom of the ladder.

Alice Harrison, who makes no longer one of the traveling troupe bearing her name, has been engaged by Brooks and Dickson, in default of Lillian Russell, for the "Merry Duchess," an opera by Clay and Sims, which treats mainly of racing and the turf.

Another terror has appeared in London for composers of popular music. An enterprising grocer has had a set of words adapted to the measures of a vocal waltz, and distributes copies of the publication to all his customers, who can thus sing the praises of "Green's Beautiful Tea" to the popular music of the day.

Mr. Al. Sheldon, stage manager of Harry Miner's theater, was bitten in the hand by a pet cat on Friday last. His hand and arm began to swell to an enormous size, and on Sunday his physicians informed him that to save his life they would have to cut off his arm above the elbow.

Although there seems a reasonable doubt as to whether Mme. Patti will return to this country next season there is already an elegant car being constructed for her use during the tour of the country, which will be nearly a duplicate of a car built in Europe for their imperial highnesses the Grand Duke Michael and consort of Russia.

W. M. Conner, speaking of John McCullough's health, says: "He was never more vigorous in physique, hearty in spirits, or enthusiastic in his profession He has been spending a brief vacation with a friend in Illinois, and will be in New York on the 10th of July to spend the remaining interval between that date and early in August, when my company opens at the Tabor Opera-house, in Denver. All other reports are purely imaginative, and this you can say with emphasis."

The London Musical Review is authority for the following news: "An interesting concert scheme is to be undertaken next winter in New York. A number of ladies have combined to give a series of 'concerts for young people,' and Mr. Theodore Thomas is to be the musical director. This means that no trashy music will be permitted on the programmes. The details of the scheme are not yet perfected, but the concerts are to be mainly orchestral."

Mr. Henry E. Dixey and Manager John Stetson have formed a copartnership for next season. Three pieces of a novel character will be presented, Mr. Dixey of course playing the leading roles. The pieces will be different in character, [illegible] Mr. Dixey's wonderful versatility ma[illegible]hown, and he will be supported by a st[illegible]ompany. To quote Mr. Dixey's own [illegible] "There will be no small parts. There will not be any 'duffers' coming on to announce that the carriage waits, while their thin shanks and misfitting hose provoke a laugh at the expense of the principals." Literary excellence in dialogue, unique situations, artistic rendition of character and elaborate and perfect stage settings are lines which are predicted for the bills of Mr. Stetson's new enterprise.

Mr. Charles Fox, who is designing the scene-plots for the new Metropolitan opera house in New York, threatens to make sad havoc with the traditions of the past in the setting of operas at the new establishment. Among the innovations he contemplates is the changing of the alchemist's laboratory used in the first act of "Faust," to a grand reception hall, instantaneous with the change in the appearance of Faust from the aged alchemist to a young man. Another change is in the setting of "Trovatore." Instead of the rocky pass which is always represented, and incorrectly, he will set it as the ruins of an abbey, according to the story. This is the scene where the anvil chorus comes in and the ballet is introduced. After this scene the exterior of a convent follows. Ordinarily that is set with dark woods, and a church appears on one side, but he is making it a convent on one side and the little chapel attached to the convent.

After a few weeks of fair business, Roland Reed and "Cheek" left Haverly's theater last Saturday night and closed the season. The play was well liked by the patrons of Haverly's, and Mr. Reed and Miss Alice Hastings made unquestionable hits. Manager Gus Mortimer expresses himself as satisfied with the result. The cast of "Pop" has been strengthened by the addition of Marie Vanoni, and the melange, as Mr. Rice calls it, will now be continued at the Bijou for two weeks longer. It will then be taken off, and the theater will be rebuilt preparatory to the opening of next season.

Mr. Charles H. McConnell, of Chicago, expresses himself perfectly satisfied with the arrangements he has made with Mr. Haverly, who, he says, owes him a large amount of money. He has secured the leases of the Brooklyn and San Francisco theaters, and will receive all the profits of the Chicago house until the indebtedness is paid. He will not assume any of Mr. Haverly's liabilities, which he estimates at $70,000. As to his opinion of Mr. Haverly's ability to pay, he says that he expects the Haverly traveling shows to clear $65,000 next year. He and Haverly contemplate a trip to Colorado for rest and to look up the Haverly mining interest. His faith is strong that Mr. Haverly will be all right again before long.

PAT'S PHILOSOPHY.

When the winter is cold
I keep meself warm;
When summer is hot
I keep meself cool;
It's mebbe I'm bold,
And it's mebbe I'm not;
But a gossoon's a fool
When he's got into harm!
Sez my ould uncle Dan—
A wise one and stiddy—
"What's the world to a man
When his wife is a widdy?"

When the soldier struts by
With his sword at his side,
And the rattle, rattle drums
Beat the roll and the call,
He may go or may fly—
I stay here till death comes,
For I mind me of all
That in battle have died;
I am like uncle Dan,
For he said—troth an' did he—
"What's the world to a man
When his wife is a widdy?"

When the sailor hoists sail,
And stands out on the deep,
Leaving sweetheart or wife
And the children behind,
He tempts the wild gale,
And he trifles with life,
And he sinks, d'ye mind,
Where the mermaidens sleep!
"Pat," sez ould uncle Dan,
"Stay at home wid yer Biddy;
What's the world to a man
When his wife is a widdy?"

Let the scholar sit up,
And write late an' long,
To ensure him a name!
He may sit up for me;
Give me but a full cup,
He may have all his fame;
For it's stuff, d'ye see,
An' not worth an ould song!
Let us live, uncle Dan;
Let us live and love, Biddy;
What's the world to a man
When his wife is a widdy?

"LESTER-LAWRENCE."

Harry Lester, he of the deep chest, the broad shoulders, curly fair hair, and blue eyes, was considered an extremely eligible man. In the greater glory of his brother's beauty and prestige, frank-faced, dark-eyed John Lester was completely overshadowed, and almost forgotten until a wily matron, whose younger daughter had angled in vain for the handsome Harry, suddenly remembered seeing the younger Mr. Lester in company with that "forward minx at the farm-house—you know the one I mean"—to her especial confident, Mrs. Eugenie Fairfax—"the girl who passes here so often. I believe somebody invited her to the hop Saturday night."

"Oh, you mean that Edie Lawrence! I have heard of her—an incorrigible flirt; she and John Lester have been a good deal together, but it is evident to me that she is using him as a tool; of course it would be only natural that Harry should join his brother once in a while; trust me for it, John Lester will be 'thrown over,' as the men say, when once his handsome brother is fairly caught."

Mrs. Fairfax evidently hit upon an unusually true version of her neighbor's love affairs, for barely a week later John Lester's place at the table was vacant one morning, and his brother acknowledged that he had left.

Miss Lawrence's mother went by the evening train, and her elder daughter, Ophelia, came down to take her place, and play chaperone to Edie. Miss Ophelia Lawrence, rather quiet and retiring, with steady gray eyes and a kind, pleasant face, good, rather than beautiful, was regarded as a good deal of an old maid, and not, by any means, to be feared as a rival by the ladies of the west end; therefore she was rather more of a favorite than her pretty younger sister.

Edie came into the house one night humming a lively tune; Ophelia suspected that she had not been alone.

"Who was that with you, Edith?" she asked very gravely.

"Mr. Lester," she replied. "He would not come in."

"Did you walk with him last evening also?" inquired Ophelia.

"Yes," said Edie, a little impatiently, and her sister said no more.

But later when they were alone in the chamber they shared together, Ophelia returned to the subject.

"Aren't you a great deal with Mr. Lester, lately, Edie?"

Edie didn't know; was she?

"Yes; and people notice it, dear; they say he is flirting with you."

Edith laughed a little.

"Do they? How silly?"

"I know it is foolish, but I don't like to have it said of you, my sister," persisted Ophelia. "Only to-night I heard Mrs. Dayton say to Miss Shewell that you were his latest conquest. You know he has the reputation of being a flirt, Edie; that most despicable thing—a male flirt!"

Edith's blue eyes flashed dangerously.

"And the world, including Mrs. Dayton, has at times been good enough to apply the same epithet to me!" she said, with curling lips and an assumption of haughtiness that was just a trifle over-acted. "Yet you do not manifest any great alarm for the safety of Mr. Lester's peace."

"Because your natural gaiety and freedom of manner are far enough from flirting; no one thinks it of you: but Mr. Lester ——"

"Don't be a goose," yawned Edith. "Let's go to sleep."

Ophelia gave up the subject with a troubled sigh. Her sister's happiness was very dear to her, and her own experience warned her of flirting men. She was a practical woman of twenty-nine now, and had little to do with the romantic side of life; but she had the memory of the time when her heart was as light and her life as full of romance as Edith's own; a time that had vanished years ago, when she lost faith in the man who had won her girlish love for the pastime of a summer holiday, and then cast it aside when he was weary of it. No wonder that her heart was heavy when she thought of a like fate for her sister. And what could she do to avert that fate?

Ophelia Lawrence was wise, but when did a happy-hearted girl ever profit by the experience of a disappointed elder sister? The very next morning Edith went out sailing with Harry Lester. They were only summer visitors at this pleasant watering-place. Edith has been there a month, and it was her first meeting with either of the Messrs. Lester, but Ophelia had once met Mr. Harry Lester in town, knew the world called him a consummate flirt, and she had heard a good deal of the same talk down here. It was two or three years since she had seen him, but even now she remembered the bluff, hearty unconventional way he had; just the opposite of what one would naturally expect to find with a man who prided himself on the idle conquest of women's hearts, but all the more dangerous, perhaps, for that very reason; and she recalled with a sigh, as she thought of Edith, how the wonderful charm of voice and manner haunted her hours after he was away.

Mr. Lester was very attentive to Edith when they met; he would always take her out sailing, or even riding once or twice, and come to the door, or gate, rather, of the house with her, as in duty bound; but he never came in, and Ophelia had never known him to call at the house and pay a visit once in a while, as men generally do when they are supposed to be courting.

Ophelia said something of this to her sister, and barely three nights later Edie brought in her cavalier; brown, stalwart, handsomer than ever. Of course, he was introduced to Ophelia, recollected having the honor to meet her before, had never forgotten that pleasure, hoped Ophelia had remembered him, and begged her to count him among her friends.

"If only for Edith's sake," he smiled, "seeing that through her I shall claim a little relationship to you."

Ophelia looked at him in sharp surprise, and then glanced at Edie, who blushed and laughed, and bit her lips; and she said nothing, but thought: "And so they are engaged. Heaven grant he may be true to her!"

That evening she went into the parlor [illegible] down by her side. They talked awhile, as sisters do; by-and-by Ophelia whispered: "Are you engaged to Mr. Lester?"

Edith shyly answered: "Yes."

"Why didn't you tell me so the other day, when I accused him of flirting with you?" demanded her sister.

"Oh, because," laughed Ella, "we meant to keep it secret until he comes,—I mean—that is—for a long time yet; but as Harry has told you, I suppose it is just as well, only, you must not tell any one else. And oh, Ophelia, dear, if you knew him as I do, you would not think him anything but what is noble and good."

"I begin to believe you," Ophelia answered with a smile.

But she sighed the next moment, thinking sadly of one whom she believed true and noble and wondering if Harry Lester would prove more faithful to her sister than he had proven to herself years before.

As the summer days went by and she saw more of Harry, who came quite frequently now, she grew to value him at his true worth, not as the world saw him, and she believed that he was true and good. He was no more of a flirt than was her careless-hearted impulsive sister; if the charm of his presence made him fascinating to women he could no more help it than he could help his handsome face, graceful figure and abundance of wherewithal to obtain many of the good things of life, which served to render him an attraction for old and young alike. As Ophelia came to know him well she liked him as she liked but few men, and she began to be anxious for his happiness instead of her sister's, for she doubted if Edie loved him as a girl should love her betrothed husband. She seldom spoke of Harry unless Ophelia herself first referred to him, and never with that innocent, girlish embarrassment that would have been so natural had she loved the young man. So she fancied that Harry was not loved as he deserved to be.

It was only a vague suspicion, but it haunted her continually, and troubled her ten times more than any real, substantial trial. What if Edie had been dazzled by his wealth, and was either proud of having a rich man at her feet, or else really intended to marry him for his money alone! She worked herself into a perfect fever over the thought, one day, and her sympathy was all for poor Harry, who, resisting the many snares laid for his benefit, had at last fallen a victim to the charms of a girl who, naturally pure-hearted and above the level of matrimonial schemes in general, was blinded and led away by the temptation which always before had been beyond the pale of her actual experience, and was, through force of circumstances rather than nature, a greater deceiver even than any of the rest.

That very night she happened to come quietly into the room, and found Edith bending over a photograph which she pressed to her lips and caressed so tenderly that Ophelia thought in pleased astonishment:

"She is dreaming over Harry's picture; she does love him, then!"

So noiselessly had she entered that Edith had not heard her, and with a mischievous thought to tease her sister she crossed the room, and leaning over Edie, cried gayly:

"Caught, my dear!"

The next moment a look of bitter indignation came into her face, and she drew away from her sister, saying, in tones of stern reproach:

"Edith, I couldn't have believed this of you!"

For it was not Harry Lester's picture that Edith held, but a different face; young, and frank and manly, but not Harry's.

"You are untrue to your lover," cried Ophelia, bitterly, as her sister sank helplessly on the ground with her head buried on her knees, and shook with emotion. "You are cherishing the picture of another, while he is wasting the love of his heart upon you, you false, wicked girl!"

Feeling her composure giving way, Ophelia turned and left the room. Five minutes later, Edie managed to get up from her undignified position, sighed deeply as she dried her eyes, and went to the desk they shared between them for writing materials. But presently she was shaking again, and the little pink note, when it was written at last, had, in truth, rather a zigzag appearance, taken all in all, though it evidently answered as well as a more official-looking document; for when Miss Ophelia Lawrence was enjoying her breakfast the next morning in solitary state, as far as concerned the rest of her family, Miss Edith, watching at her window, beheld one of the hotel messengers open the gate and ring the bell, that was probably used once in six months. A note for Miss Ophelia, and the bearer awaited an answer.

It was addressed in a round, bold hand, and in no little wonder Ophelia broke the seal.

MY DEAR MISS LAWRENCE: Edith tells me that the time for explanation has arrived; believe me, I have awaited it with no little impatience. Will you permit me to call and make my excuses in person for the little deception which was practiced solely in the hope that the "end would justify the means"—a hope that your answer to a question I am longing to ask may crush forever? But I am still brave enough to wish it put to the test. Sincerely, HARRY LESTER.

Ophelia forgot to finish her breakfast, and the next half hour was one filled with conflicting emotions, in which bewilderment fought quite a battle with the new-born certainty, resulting in the sudden destruction of the thin, flimsy veil which had covered the secret she had fancied was so securely hidden in her own heart that even she herself hardly recognized its existence. The appearance of Mr. Lester's handsome figure but added "fuel to the flame," until that gentleman, without more ado, encircled her in his manly arms, and Edie, waxing impatient at last, and perhaps feeling just a trifle slighted after all she had done to bring them together, made bold to intrude, and came upon the "flirting" Mr. Lester and the "old-maidish" Miss Lawrence, billing and cooing like a pair of turtle-doves, and indulging, after the manner of all lovers, in those soft, honeyed phrases which seem to be an especial delight to them, and a wonder to every one else.

"Oh!" said Edie. "I may presume we are both forgiven?" And Ophelia laughed and grew rosy. For Harry had told her of Edie's private engagement to his brother John, and how the latter, ordered to "the springs" for a few weeks, had left her in his brother's care; also how Miss Edie, learning of her sister's opinion concerning Harry Lester and Harry Lester's private feelings toward her sister just about the same time, had made a confidant of her future brother-in-law, and solemnly assured him that he had no possible chance of winning her sister until he could persuade her that his "intentions were honorable:" he was not what she thought him, and as "all's fair in love and war," there was no possible harm in taking advantage of John's solemn charge. By which Edie gained a little fun for herself, and a rich and handsome husband for her sister; for a little later in the year there was a double wedding at Mrs. Lawrence's comparatively plain town house, and the fashionable papers had an announcement under the list of marriages reading as follows:

LESTER—LAWRENCE—At the residence of the brides, Harry Lester to Ophelia, eldest daughter of the late John Lawrence, and John Lester to Edith, second daughter of the late John Lawrence.

Which, meeting the eye of Mrs. Eugenie Fairfax, brought forth a cry of triumph.

"I knew the girl was after Harry Lester! I said in the summer that her encouragement of his brother had something behind it—she wanted him for her sister, you see; he was too sharp for herself. An old maid! Why, my dear child, they are the sharpest beings on the face of the earth! See how Ophelia Lawrence snapped him up! That was all in the world that brought her down to Long Branch. Oh, I know them well!"

The Secret.

The Baltimore News says it is preposterous to speak of substantial success without intrinsic, unquestioned merit. St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-cure, is a most pronounced example. Its immense sale is due to its merits.

THE CHEAPEST AND BEST—The twenty words [illegible]

A SOUTHERNER'S REVENGE.

A Reminiscence of the South Carolina Rhetts—A Bully's Enforced Meal.

Washington Letter in Philadelphia Record.

Years before the war, while sectional feeling was boiling toward fever heat, one of the young Rhetts of South Carolina was sent to Harvard University. At the time the students at Fair Harvard were pretty sharply divided by Mason and Dixon's line. The northern boys were led by a big bully from a New Hampshire farm. He thrashed everybody in both parties, but he displayed his partiality by thrashing the southern boys twice to the northern boys, once. The university has changed wonderfully since then, of course, but at that time it was more like a great English university. Young Mr. Rhett had not been there long before he was knocked down by young Mr. New Hampshire. It was a novel experience for the young aristocrat, and he could only think of one remedy. He promptly sent the bully a challenge. The young man from New Hampshire made no immediate reply. This naturally increased the curiosity of the other fellows as to what the outcome would be. The next morning the young New Hampshire waited at the chapel door for young Rhett. Quite a crowd had gathered when Mr. Rhett arrived. "Did you write that?" asked the New Hampshire boy savagely, holding the challenge before Rhett's face. "Yes, I did," said Rhett, pale of face but defiant of heart. New Hampshire said nothing more, but deliberately tore the challenge into snips and bits, and then threw the bits into Rhett's white face. The New Hampshire boy and the other fellows passed into the chapel, and the dazed South Carolinian was left alone. Mechanically he stopped, and bit by bit picked up the pieces of paper lying at his feet. Then he went over to Boston, playing with the bits of paper in his pocket as he went. In the afternoon he reappeared, but he said nothing to his nearest friend about his visit to Boston. Nor did he disclose his plans for getting even with his enemy. Every day for weeks he regularly visited Boston, and when not away on these trips occupied himself with his text books. One day, when quite a number of his fellows were standing on the campus, among them the bully from New Hampshire, young Rhett appeared there for the first time in many days. "Come here," he said to young New Hampshire, calling him by name. "Come here, yourself," said the bully. "Meet me half way," said Rhett, and the bully consented. As soon as New Hampshire got within striking distance Rhett quickly knocked him down. Surprised and maddened, Mew Hampshire rushed at Rhett like an angry bull. Rhett felled him like a butcher, and every time New Hampshire approached Rhett very skillfully defended himself and very skillfully offended New Hampshire. At length the latter, badly used up, fell helpless at Rhett's feet. Rhett immediately put his foot on his breast. "Let me up," moaned New Hampshire. "Not just yet," said Rhett. "You got a challenge from me once?" "Yes," groaned New Hampshire. "Instead of replying to it like a gentleman," went on Rhett, "you tore it up and flung the pieces in my face." "Yes," groaned New Hampshire, with an effort. "Well," said Rhett, coolly. "I saved the pieces, and you've got to eat them before you get up." There upon he slowly fed the New Hampshire the carefully preserved bits he had picked up at his feet in front of the chapel door weeks before. And the bully ate them all. Rhett had utilized his Boston trips to the bestadvantage with the most scientific sluggers of his day. It was not until he hae succeeded in knocking one of his instructors down that he undertook New Hampshire. Tradition has it in Georgia, where I heard the story, that Rhett and New Hampshire subsequently faced one another on the battlefield, Rhett falling under New Hampshire's sword, only to see New Hampshire prostrated by a rebel bullet.

Morphine.

The habit of injecting morphine under the skin has within the last three or four years become frightfully common. Its devotees do not grasp the idea that they are becoming addicted to something which is worse than drunkenness. It works physical and mental ruin, even more quickly than strong drink, and takes a firmer hold on its victim. But there is relief from it. Dr. D'Unger's famous "Cure for Drunkenness" reaches this form of intoxication. Many are the cures recorded by it. Some of these are of gifted and elegant ladies, moving in high social circles. There is no mistake about it. Those who wish to know more should write to Dr. D'Unger, 81 South Clark street, Chicago.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The Litigious Career of the Terror of New Orleans.

From the Cleveland Leader's Washington Letter.

For the last forty-eight years this indomitable woman has fought for her rights in the courts of the United States. Her case is one of the most remarkable ones on record. It involves the title to millions of dollars of property in New Orleans, and it will probably not be finally settled as long as the city can legally fight against it. It is now eighty-two years since Daniel Clark, a handsome, polished young man, who had been for some years leading the life of an Indian trader in Mississippi, came to Philadelphia to spend the winter. Clark was a gay fellow, and he took in all the pleasures of the then metropolis of America. In his rounds he met a French beauty, and fell in love with her. This woman's name was Zulime Carrier, and at the time she was living with a Frenchman named La Grange Clark met her. Whether she was married to La Grange or not is one of the points in question. The defendants claim she was his legal wife. At any rate when Clark met her, in 1805, she left La Grange, and went to live with Clark. The supreme court of the United States has decided that she was privately married to Clark and that she was merely La Grange's mistress.

In 1806, seventy-seven years ago, Myra Clark was born. She was the only child Zulime Carrier had by Daniel Clark.

At this time Clark sent Zulime to New Orleans, and acted as a bachelor. He engaged himself in marriage, and formed other connections producing other offspring. He denied the fact that he had married Zulime, and when she came back and pushed the case in the Philadelphia courts she was unable to succeed. She finally took up with Dr. Gardette, and lived with him until he died.

But while Clark would have nothing to do with the mother, he took good care of the child. Myra Clark was well educated by him, and was treated by him as a daughter. He went again into Indian trading at New Orleans, and amassed an immense fortune. In 1813, just seventy years ago, he died, and a will was produced showing that all of his property was left to his mother and to the city of New Orleans. Myra Clark, then only seven years old, was apparently penniless, and the executors took charge of the estate.

When Myra grew to the age of twenty, she married a Mr. Whitney, and then she began to contest the will. She claimed she was the only legitimate daughter of Daniel Clark, and that his property was hers. The claim was at once hotly contested, and Mr. Whitney died before it was tried.

The widow continued to prosecute the suit. Shortly afterward she married Gen. Gaines, and he entered into the case as warmly as herself. The case was tried at New Orleans. It was lost. It was carried to the supreme court at Washington. It was again lost. In 1852 it seemed a hopeless fight, and at this time Gen. Gaines died.

But Myra Clark Gaines was not discouraged, and shortly after this time she discovered a will executed by her father, certifying that Myra was his only child, and creating her his sole heir. Upon this will she again went before the courts in New Orleans. She again lost. She again appealed to the supreme court at Washington, and here, in 1861, she obtained a judgment confirming this will and giving her the whole property left by her fath[er] and the rents thereof for the past thirt[illegible]rs. Then the war broke out, and jus[illegible]as again delayed. Since then, she ha[illegible]hink, received something from the ci[illegible]t nothing in comparison with her rights. She is now seventy-seven years of age, and will be, perhaps, the richest woman in the United States, if she ever comes into the property for which she has so pluckily fought for a lifetime.

STOKES' SALOON.

Bob Ingersoll Treating His Friends in the Famous Bar-room.

New York Cor. Boston Herald.

About an hour ago, standing on Twenty-fourth street and debating in my mind whether I should go into Madison Square theater or into the magnificently decorated, picturesquely adorned bar-room kept by the tolerably well known Edward S. Stokes, a group of men passed me and entering the latter named place, determined my course. I followed them, and, taking a seat at one of the round tables near the window, had the pleasure of seeing Col. Bob Ingersoll extend the hospitality of the bar to his friends. It was a tolerably warm time and the colonel confined himself to a seltzer lemonade, which he drank with evident relish. Don't be alarmed. I am not about to inflict a criticism or a review of the noted special pleader's views on religion, but as his personality interested me, doubtless it will you.

Ingersoll has come on from Washington flushed with victory and with government scalps decorating his ample belt. A reasonable expectation would picture him jaded, tired, pale and feeble. The fact is precisely the reverse. He stands nearly six feet high, with a round, bullet-shaped bald head, twinkling blue eyes, a perfectly clean shaven face, red as a cherry, leading to a sturdy neck, which loses itself in shoulders of tremendous proportions, a fitting top to a well-proportioned but noticeably rotund figure. The manner in which he wears his hat, the pose of his head, the entire status of his physique aptly picture the individualistic mentality which has made him not only notorious but famous in the realms of thought.

In common with Beecher, Webster, Ben Butler, Garfield and other heavy-framed men accustomed to deal with public audiences, Mr. Ingersoll has a not entirely pleasant habit of apparently addressing his utterances, not alone to the individual with whom he is coversing, but to the surrounding spectators, who ere long find themselves insensibly made part and parcel of what hitherto had been a perfectly private conversation. Still Ingersoll's talk is bright and breezy, tinctured with self-reliance, self-esteem and a trifle of self-conceit. He is an inveterate smoker, but has the habit of allowing his flame to die out, after which he finds the, to me, utterly non-understandable enjoyment of a second, third, and sometimes fourth and fifth relighting.

During the fifteen minutes of Ingersoll's stay in and about the bar-room there were probably two hundred other visitors, of whom not more than ten failed to recognize him. At times he was surrounded by fifteen or twenty, some of whom he knew, the majority being strangers who looked at him as though he was as insensate as the pictures on the wall and as ready to be stared at as the statues on the pedestals. This, by the way, is a pecular tendency of human nature in this part of the world. When Mrs. Langtry appears upon the streets not only rude men, but others who appear to be gentlemen, and women by the scores follow her, walk closely by her side, precede her several yards, turn so as to meet her face to face and stare at her as though she were a piece of bisque or a phenomenon in earthly guise. It is the same way with others who might be mentioned, a habit which, whether peculiar to New York or not, certainly finds its normal development in our streets, in our hotels, and in all our public places. Mr. Ingersoll tells me that he has come with his family to bathe in the ocean and rest in the quiet of Long beach. He takes no stock in any more star-route trials, and is naturally exhilarated but perfectly good-natured in his discussion of the farce which has tediously and expensively worn its way to the same verdict with which we are all familiar.

A Rich Man Starved.

From the Somerville Journal.

"So Jones is dead," said one Somerville man to another.

"Yes, poor fellow," was the reply, "he's gone."

"What did he die of?" inquired the first speaker.

"Starvation," was the answer.

"Starvation! Good gracious, the man was worth $50,000."

"I know that; nevertheless, he died of starvation. I'll tell you how it was: Jones was always fancying that there was something the matter with him; so he went to a doctor one day and had himself examined, and the doctor informed him that he had kidney disease, and besides taking medicine must diet himself. Said the doctor: 'You must avoid all kinds of salt meats, salt fish, potatoes, cabbage, and vegetables of every kind.' Jones followed the advice, but found himself no better. He went to another doctor, and after being examined was informed that he must avoid all kinds of fresh meats also. This did not do him any good, as he thought, and he went to another doctor, who highly approved of the advice which had previously been given, and further warned him against all kinds of pastry, likewise shellfish, including oysters and clams. 'The best thing for you is a milk diet,' said this doctor; so Jones lived wholly upon milk. Not feeling himself any better, he went to another doctor, who cautioned him to avoid milk, above all things, if he wanted to get well. This reduced Jones to a diet of cold water and fresh air, and finding himself no better upon this regimen, he went to another doctor, who urged him to beware of drinking too much water and being too much in the air. This last advice cut off the last of Jones' article of diet, and he died of starvation, as I have told you."

Moving West.

From the Cleveland Leader.

Massachusetts has the credit of having the largest shoe manufacturing interest of any state in the union, and it is due chiefly to her enterprise that America is conceded to have attained the highest perfection in the art of shoe-making of any country in the world. Perhaps few are aware that the shoe and leather interest of the United States is next in importance and value to the agricultural, and largely exceeds that of iron, coal, woolen, or even cotton. The annual sales of shoes and leather mount up to something like $250,000,000. Most of this trade is centered in the eastern states, but the manufacture of shoes is growing largely in the west, and, had it not been that Massachusetts had about three-fourths of the trade, she might have lost her prestige several years ago, having been almost distanced by the industries of the enterprising western states in the commercial race, and so rapidly is progression rolling on west of the "eastern" limit that the Bay state may yet have to look to her laurels in this matter.

TRUTH is mighty and has prevailed. See its triumph in Hop Bitters all over the world.

The Value of Competition in Business.

Competition forces every one who would achieve the highest success in any business to avail himself of all legitimate means to that end. A. T. Stewart started in a small way in selling dry goods; with increased capital, a wider experience as a buyer, and a better knowledge of the wants and tastes of the public, enabled him to procure specially intelligent labor. The public was well served, and he was largely benefited by his enterprise. Look at another distinctly American industry. The primitive American stoves were clumsy affairs. To-day they are everywhere recognized as the best in the world for convenience, utility and beauty. Look at the great success of the makers of the Charter Oak stove. Starting in a small way in 1847, the business gradually developed and increased. To-day it is the largest factory in the world of its class, and brought to St. Louis a reputation for good stove-work which is now world wide, more than 400,000 Charter Oak stoves being in constant use, abundantly testifying to the fact that they are well worth buying and making the homes of the people comfortable

THE STRANGLERS.

Four Ways of Strangling People in the City of Paris.

Translated for the Times-Democrat from Le Figaro.

A recent crime recalls attention to a peculiar system of assassination which at various epochs created great excitement in Paris. When the corpse of Cesarine Lorriere was recently found, everybody supposed that death must have been caused by a violent blow in the chest. But the autopsy proved the mistake—she had certainly been strangled, although the experts could not decide in what manner.

The reason was simply this: The assassin had adopted a particular method, now very little known, although really a hundred years old, and registered on police records as "Old Father Grancois' dodge"—coup a la pere Francois.

Now in the course of my own private researches upon robbery and crime—the results of which studies I constantly withhold from publication because I am constantly discovering something to add to them—I have discovered four different ways of strangling, viz.: Father Francois' way, garroting, the shoe-lace and "suspension."

"FATHER FRANCOIS' WAY."

The first famous strangler was a fellow named Francois Denizett, nicknamed Father Francois. He flourished about 1790. Having failed in business as a cabinet-maker, he was already an old man when he began his career of crime.

He was a master-robber—a cagon, as they used to say in those days. He was also "a solitary," who did his work without accomplices. He always wore about his person, like a belt, a fine and narrow leather strap, made of strong but supple leather. At one end of this strap there was a buckle attached—a buckle without any tongue; and three sides of this buckle was covered with little metal cylinders serving as pulleys. To the other end of the strap a leaden ball was fastened, which served the double purpose of a handle, and in case of necessity a "slung-shot."

Father Francois would, on some imaginary pretext, introduce himself into a house which he knew to be momentarily occupied by a single woman only. Sometimes he would enter as though to make a neighborly call—like any bon jourier. He would then engage in conversation, and at a propitious moment would suddenly fling the running noose of his strap over the victim's head, press against the base of her neck with his left hand, and pull with his right. In one minute the poor creature would be strangled.

This master-strangler—a product of the first republic—ended his villainous career in a very singular fashion.

It happened in the early part of 1793. Francois Denizet had done two good "jobs" in the neighborhood of the Marche des Innocents. They were highly profitable ventures; and he was imprudent enough to risk a third. It was the end of him! The women who kept stores had become terrified at the two previous crimes, committed in the middle of the day, and were all upon their guard.

At four o'clock on Sunday afternoon our "Strangler" entered No. 3 Rue de la Reynie, under the pretext of selling handkerchiefs to a certain Madame Lalouette, who kept a stand in the market. This woman—a solidly built and active person, quick of hand and eye—was preparing dinner for her family. Just as Francois entered she was about to cook a roast of beef, and she held an immense iron spit in her right hand.

The moment she looked at the pretended peddler, the recollection of the "stranglers" came to her;—she prepared herself against attack, and never took her eyes off of the man for a moment. When Father Francois thought he had a good opportunity he threw his strap; but at the same moment Madame Lalouette threw up her left hand, and the noose wound itself around it. Then she gave Francois such a terrible thrust in the abdomen with her spit that it actually disappeared in his body. The blow was all the more violent because Francois had at the same instant pulled her violently toward him, in the hope of flinging her down and murdering her.

Madame Laloutte called for help; the neighbors rushed in, and Father Francois was arrested. But he was foolish enough to recover from being "spitted," and was one of the first ferlampiers of note who entertained the guillotine after its inaction of several months.

This, it will be preceived, was the identical plan adopted by the recent murderers,—Beghein and Biin, at the Palais-Royal. It had also been renewed some years ago by a scoundrel named Sommer, or "The One-Eyed;" but he made a poor success of it, and is, probably, at this moment in the penal colony of Noumea

GARROTING

Garroting—first essayed by Beghein in lieu of the other method, if we can attach any credence to the confessions of the two murderers—is far more difficult to succeed in. One must have solid "mauleys" to be a garroter. Nevertheless the method has been several times successfully put in practice—especially by one Pierre Chayne, nicknamed Trompe-la-Mort, or "Fool-Death." Chayne was a giant—thin, yellow, bony, sinewy, and the owner of two enormous hands which could easily cover the whole surface of an ordinary one-legged table. He always worked "outside"—in the public streets—and by night, while Father Francois, on the contrary, worked by day, and preferred "inside" jobs.

Pierre Chayne would approach his victim under pretense of asking for alms, a light for his pipe, the time, or the way to some place; then he would suddenly leap at their throats, fling them down, and break their heads against the pavement.

He was "palmed," as the thieves say, under very curious circumstances.

In 1838 the police being in search of a band of robbers, made a descent upon the lodging-houses of the Quartier Maubert. Accompanying the commissary and his agents was a certain attache of the Prussian embassy, who had requested and obtained permission to assist the police in their nocturnal expedition. He had been warned, however, to be prudent, never to linger behind for a moment,—to keep close to the agents.

At last they came to a lodging-house in the Rue des Anglais—a veritable robbers' den, and ascended to the first floor, which was a "square" (big room) with six pallets therein. While the police were making the first sleeper get up and dress himself, the attache noticed at the further end of a room a bed beyond the end of which two feet stuck out more than twenty centimetres. The attache advanced, with his eyeglass in his eye, to take a nearer view of that long biped. It was an unfortunate curiosity on his part; for "Fool-Death" (it was he) suddenly rose to a sitting posture and dealt the unhappy German a blow between the eyes that sent him rolling among the legs of the policemen.

They rushed upon "Fool-Death," handcuffed him, and the commissary reproached him for his brutality. He retorted in his jargon:

"Pourquoi c'pantruchois-la vient y me r'bouiner sous le blaire—est-ce que j'y dois queque chose?"—["What did the idiot want to stare at my mug for? do I owe him anything?"]

Condemned to imprisonment for life, Pierre Chayne, alias "Fool-Death," was killed at the galleys in Brest,—crushed by the falling of a woodpile.

THE SHOE-LACE.

The shoe-lace stranglers seem to have borrowed their idea from the famous Thugs of India. Their system is easily explained. They first approach the victim under such pretexts as that of begging a light, asking the time, inquiring the name of a street, etc., and profit by his distraction to throw over his neck a slender but very tough string. This was how Bistor killed a woman in the Rue de Charenton; and it was also in this way that on May 30, 1879, the widow Boyer, who kept a fruit-stand in the Rue de Pont-aux-Choux, was murdered. Her murderer was never discovered.

One of the most famous laceurs, Paul Bautiere, allowed himself to be caught in the most foolish manner imaginable.

Possessing herculean strength, immediately he had thrown his noose about a victim's neck he started off at a run, dragging the poor wretch after him until dead or insensible.

For this practice he naturally selected wide and desolate places in the outskirts.

One evening while he was on one of his "hunting expeditions" near the institute, he saw a gentleman approaching whom he chose at once for his prey. It was a bad choice for him. The said gentleman was a detective named Cloarac, a Breton, an ex-sailor, and immensely strong.

Cloarac lived at Grenelle. He very soon perceived that he was being followed. He let the fellow approach, making up his mind to give him a warm reception when he should attempt to board him.

When he got to the Champ de Mars, he paused, and addressing his pursuer, asked in a feigned and trembling voice:—"What do you want of me, sir?"—pretending that he was on the point of taking to his heels.

—"Forty sous for my bed-money," answered the strangler.

Cloarac made out as though he were rummaging his pockets; but the moment the strangler drew nearer to throw his lasso, Cloarac put his head down and rushed at him, butting him in the stomach with such force as to fling him ten steps away.

Before he could rise Cloarac leaped on him, and beat him so terribly that he could not rise. The detective was obliged to lift him upon his own shoulders, and carry him, groaning and bleeding, to the police station.

Paul Bautiere, sentenced to only twenty years, served his time in the galleys at Toulon, and afterward became a beggar. Cloarac had crippled him for life.

SUSPENSION.

"Suspension," or hanging, is a much more modern method of strangulation, practiced chiefly in the lowest quarters in the city. Two persons are required for this work, the "suspender" and the "rummager." If the accomplices are men, they generally select drunken parties for victims. If it be a man and woman who practice the crime, it is usually accomplished thus:

The woman, always a female of ill repute, called vanneuse (liar), approaches an individual and engages conversation with him, endeavoring to entice him to follow her. While this is going on her "man" approaches, like any other pedestrian, holding in his hand the ends of a long and large handkerchief twisted into a rope. The moment he comes near enough he suddenly passes the handkerchief under the victim's chin, turns himself half way round with a jerk and raises the poor wretch upon his back like a sack.

The more the victim struggles, the sooner he is strangled. He loses consciousness. While he is in this condition the woman, the vanneuse, plays the part of fouilleuse, ransacking his pockets, and taking from him every object of value. When this has been done, the "suspender" lets the victim fall heavily to the ground.

This was how a poor workman was murdered a few months ago in a dark alley at Grenelle. The murderers obtained only an old silver watch and twenty francs. In defense the criminals swore that they had not intended to kill him, but only to gag him, and that the handkerchief had slipped from his mouth over his neck.

This is the best monograph I am able to make upon the "stranglers" of Paris. If any of my readers know of a fifth system I will be happy to record it.

Took the Risk.

From the Wall Street News.

When Brigham Young was alive he collected his tenth of the farmer with a persistency that balked at nothing. On one occasion he called before him a subject who has since removed to this state, and said:

"Brother Blank you have not brought in my wheat this year."

"I didn't raise a single bushel," was the reply.

"Then I'll take it in oats."

"I have none."

"Well, hay will do."

"I have no hay."

"Then bring in potatoes or corn."

"Both crops were a failure, oh, wise prophet. All I have off my farm are ten bushels of onions, and of course the Lord doesn't eat onions."

"Maybe not," growled the old man, "but you may bring me a bushel and we'll take the risk of it."

Mr. Blank said it was that bushel of onions which convinced him that there was something suspicious about old Brigham's inspirations. It was too strong a religion.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Sago prepared like custard, and then baked with apples or other fresh or canned fruit is a nice dish for a convalescent.

If a straw hat has been wet, and the stiffness has departed, rub a little white of egg mixed with cold water over it; put it on with a flannel cloth.

Although melted butter will not answer when making nice cake, still it may be softened by heat so that it will beat easily, and yet the flavor be unchanged.

Frozen oranges for dessert on a July day are delicious. Remove the peel and slice the oranges; to each pound of oranges add three-quarters of a pound of sugar and one-half pint of water, and freeze.

To give consistency to a pie-plant pie; allow to one coffee-cupful of pulp one heaping tablespoonful of cornstarch; then mix with this the yolks of three eggs, and use the whites for a meringue.

A fancy for children's party cake is to make plain or sponge cake, and bake in shallow tins: cut in small oblong pieces a little larger than dominoes, and then, with a brush dipped in melted chocolate, make the marks and dots.

Stewed liver is appetizing when one is tired of fried meat and roast. Stew it in a saucepan with a little water in which you have put a lump of butter, an onion cut in slices, and a liberal allowance of pepper and salt.

A pretty way to brighten a willow chair is to tie two bows to the back of the chair, a blue one at the top and a pink or cream-colored one below it, at about the center of the back, or have both of them of scarlet ribbon; tie them so that loops and ends are about the same length.

Peanut candy is made of two cups of molasses, one cup of brown sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one of vinegar; while it is boiling remove the shells and brown skins from the peanuts, lay them in buttered pans, and when the candy is done pour it over them. While it is still warm cut it in blocks.

A one-egg bread pudding is sometimes greatly to be desired. Beat one egg with one teaspoonful of flour, three of brown sugar, one pint of milk, a little salt; place some very thin slices of buttered bread in a pudding-dish, then pour the custard already made over this, and bake for half an hour. Fruit may be added, and spices to suit the taste.

Veal cutlets are very nice if dipped in eggs, then in fine bread-crumbs, with pepper, salt, and a little parsley chopped and mixed with the bread. Have some fat, very hot, in the pan before you put the cutlets in. After frying the veal pour most of the fat out of the pan and make a rich, brown gravy. Serve with mashed potatoes, turnips and tomatoes.

French mustard is thus made in America: Four tablespoonfuls of mustard, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, black pepper and flour, with vinegar enough to cover these; mix all well and let it come to a boil; when cold add a little salad oil, say one or two tablespoonfuls; this gives smoothness to the whole.

THE SUMMER GIRL.

Pretty, Sentimental, Convenient and Inexpensive.

From the Trenton Times.

The summer girl is a peculiarly American product. No other soil, so far as known, has ever produced her. She seems to have been discovered several years ago by some college students, and has since been cultivated to a large extent all over the country. She is a very popular creature in certain quarters, and possesses undoubted charms and has her advantages. It might not be amiss just now to enumerate a few of her uses.

The summer girl is a great convenience. She does not expect to be fondled and fed on dainties during the winter. The young man who cultivates her acquaintance knows just when and where to find her. He is not expected to become acquainted with her before strawberry time. She does not display her airy fairness, so to speak, until the ice-cream season is thoroughly ripe. The hammock in which she swings and the perforated sleeves that she wears do not appear before June.

The summer girl is sentimental. Having an active existence only during the warm months, it becomes necessary for her to lay in a stock of sentiment during three months that will last throughout the year. Therefore, she is very sweet, very tender, very caressable. The young man who claims her for his own from June to September is believed to have a very "soft" time of it. He is supposed in sentimental slang to have all the hugging and kissing that he wants. The summer girl always has a supply of kisses on hand. It is true some of her kisses are rather stale, having been kept all winter, but when they are warmed up they pass very readily for fresh ones. The young man who cultivates summer girls is not very particular what kind of kisses he gets so long as they are the cling kind.

The summer girl is pretty. If she wasn't pretty she wouldn't be a summer girl. She wears a pretty girl's dresses, has a pretty girl's teeth, and puts on a pretty girl's smiles. She also has a dimple or two to add to the picture. She is usually plump, but not stout; well formed, but not rotund. The young man who pays for her strawberries and cream, and takes her to picnics where they play copenhagen, is always proud of her. The summer girl never gets soiled or looks dirty. She even manages to keep her back hair in good shape after a hugging match.

The summer girl is not very expensive. Her wishes are few and cheap. A row on the river now and then, an occasional buggy ride, a plate of ice cream of a warm evening, and an escort to a picnic about once in two weeks, nearly sums up her wants. Being only a summer girl, she does not expect those presents and that devotion that belong to the regular, every-day-in-the-week and twice-on-Sunday-all-the-year-round girl. The summer girl is more like some luscious fruit that comes only for a time and then is gone for the year, but is peculiarly sweet while it lasts.

ARNHEIMER, BARBER.

Accomplishments He Brought From the Fatherland of Small Use Here.

From the New York Sun.

A red, white and blue pole, with a starry terminus, surrounded by a circular iron railing that gives it the appearance of a species of patriotic vegetation, stands near the curbstone in front of the three-story frame house at 37 Sumner avenue, Williamsburgh. Under a striped awning is a wide show-window, in which are a dozen flower pots containing geraniums. Leaning against one of the flower pots is a sign on which is inscribed:

Teeth-pulling, Leeching,
Cupping, Bleeding,
Hair-cutting and Shaving.

The reporter entered the gaudily painted door beneath the awning yesterday to see the possessor of all these accomplishments. A man about fifty-seven years of age, with florid face, a pleasant smile and great rotundity of body, was lathering a merry-e[illegible] Irishman. The latherer was Mr. John A[rn]heimer, a native of Augsburg, Germany, [illegible] for the last twenty-five years a resident [illegible] Brooklyn. Mr. Arnheimer, like the gre[illegible] majority of his craft, was conversational. He said that he had been a barber, with [illegible] that the term implies in Germany, for for[illegible] two years. "And," continued Mr. Arnheimer, "the term first-class barber impli[es] a great deal in Germany. When I left the fatherland, twenty-five years ago, every go[od] barber was expected to be not only able [to] draw a tooth, cup, leech, or bleed a man, but to understand how to set an arm or leg, and, if necessary, cut either off. A course in college of anatomy was necessary to a good barber. I spent between six and seven years pulling teeth, doctoring limbs, and bleeding, cupping and leeching. I served three years at shaving and haircutting. [In] the old country it was a source of pro[fit]. When I was in Germany, if a man broke an arm or a leg, he ran, or was carried into the nearest barber shop, and had the injured limb properly set. Here, when a leg or arm is broken, it is set by a doctor, and generally improperly set at that. You can see evidences of this every day on the streets—men with one leg shorter than the other, deformed arms. I don't do enough leeching, cupping, and bleeding and tooth-extracting to buy meals for my family. What I do is done mostly for the benefit of shaving customers, and to keep my hand in."

"Why did you fence in your barber pole?" the reporter asked.

"Oh, to keep the dirty hands of the children away from it."

"Did you use that kind of a sign [in] Germany?"

"Oh, no; there I had three brass plates somewhat resembling pie plates, [illegible] above the door in the shape of a triangle. I put up the pole in order to be in the fashion."

"What do the brass plates signify to Germans?"

"They haven't any signification [illegible] know of. I understand that the red of the American barber pole represents the [illegible], the blue, veins, and the white, bandages."

"What do the stars represent?"

"They represent," said the Irishman, who sat up in the barber's chair, "what [illegible] sees when he gets his tooth pulled out [illegible] barber."

LIFE'S MISERY.

We sow the glebe, we reap the corn,
We build the house where we may rest;
And then at moments suddenly
We look up to the great wide sky,
Inquiring wherefore we were born—
For earnest or for jest?

God keeps His holy mysteries
Just on the outside of man's dream!
In diapason slow, we think
To hear their pinions rise and sink,
While they float pure beneath His eyes,
Like swans adown a stream.

And sometimes horror chills our blood
To be so near such mystic things;
And we wrap round us, for defense,
Our purple manners, moods of sense—
As angels from the face of God
Stand hidden in their wings.

And sometimes through life's heavy swound,
We grope for them—with strangled breath
We stretch our hands abroad and try
To reach them in our agony—
And widen so the broad life-wound,
Which soon is large enough for death.

ELEGANT LOUNGERS.

The Seductive Qualities and Cost of Belonging to Big City Clubs.

From the New York Journal.

Club life in this city is as luxurious as anywhere in the world. There are no more palatial club-houses anywhere than the Union League, the Union, or the Lotus clubs, which, in the elegance of their furniture and appointments, take the lead, while the others, the Manhattan, the Century, or the St. Nicholas, are handsomely and comfortably provided.

To a man with a home, particularly if he is married, a club is a luxury; to a man living in lodgings or boarding, it is a home, for in its parlors he finds the comforts and companionship of the home circle. To a married man with a home, his club is a place he only goes to give a dinner to a friend he does not care to bring home, or to spend an hour or two in chat with friends he is sure to find there, or for a friendly game of cards. The single man, whose lodging is merely a dormitory, makes the club his constant resort, for his meals, for social intercourse, for lounging, and he generally makes it his post-office address. Being a luxury to the family man, the club is a needless expense to him; to the single man, however, it is a necessity, and therefore an incidental part of his expenditures.

Club life is not so expensive as the outside world imagines. The principle is that of the commonwealth, and the aim is not to make money, but give everything at as near cost prices as possible. All the clubs, except the Lotos club, "run" their own bar and restaurant, generally "making a loss" on the restaurant, which, however, is partially or wholly recovered by the profits from the bar. It is estimated that the annual dues will defray the running expense of the club, that is, the rent, attendance, light, heat, etc., and the receipts from the bar and restaurant maintain themselves. The problem of the restaurant is a vexatious question in all the clubs. If it is given to a steward at his own risk it is claimed that his prices are too high; if it is run by the club and the prices charged just cover the cost, it generally runs behind and the profits of the bar are relied on to balance the two accounts. All the clubs, excepting the Lotos, the University, the Lambs, the Madison and the St. Nicholas, own their club-houses; and the Union League, the Century, the Union, the Knickerbocker and the Manhattan clubs own, consequently, valuable real estate, the bonded interest on which, however, amounts to a handsome rental.

Club life cannot be led by a man in moderate circumstances, receiving only the salary of a book-keeper or clerk. If a man can afford to belong to a club he can afford to go to first-class restaurants and bars, and he will find his club cheaper. The prices at the club for edibles and liquors range from those of, say, the Sinclair house or the Astor house, and say Delmonico's and the Gilsey house. A man in moderate circumstances would not steadily patronize any of those places, but would go to the Continental hotel or some such place, and to him the club would be beyond his means. Feeing the servants is forbidden by the rules in all the clubs, but in this house a box is placed for the servants, and the saving in this respect and similar others about pays the annual dues, which ranges from $30 per annum to $100. The initiation fees range from $100 to $1,000. The membership at most of the clubs is full, and membership is consequently only secured by a vacancy from death, resignation or other cause. The different clubs have different rules in regare to credit and posting for indebtedness, but the majority of them "post" publicly on the bulletin board after twenty-four hours, or at furthest the expiration of a week. It is considered no disgrace to be posted, but simply a gentle reminder of the indebtedness, unless, indeed, the delinquent allows the charge to remain up until he is suspended and finally dropped for non-payment of the same. It is a curious fact worth noticing that the richest men in the club are generally those who are posted.

Strangers in the city are frequently made card members by the courtesy of one of the members; that is to say, they receive a card entitling them to the privilege of membership for two weeks, the giver of the card being held responsible by the club for any debts the visitor may contract and forget to pay. Unscrupulous adventurers, young scapegraces from the English army, well introduced, frequently "do" some friend here this way, by running up a large bill at the club during the weeks they have the run, and then not paying the same, the members having to assume the indebtedness.

The various clubs are as distinctive as their names. The Manhattan, the Union League and the Oriental are political and much resorted to by politicians. The republicans congregate at the Union League, which was founded during the war, and all the prominent office-holders, from President Arthur down, are members. Hon. S. J. Tilden and Tom Kelly are both members of the Manhattan club. The Century club has a quiet, staid, elderly, wealthy membership, whose only occasion of life is the monthly art reception and supper during the winter. The Union is a social club, with a strong fermentation of stock brokers and horsemen, the political element being well represented by Dorsheimer and Belmont and Schell. The Lotos and Lambs are art and literary clubs, with an infusion of the business and professional element, the former making a specialty of its ladies' and art receptions, the latter of its monthly Sunday professional dinner. The Knickerbocker is all "horse," and singular to say, "very English." The Madison lost its identity with the change of name and stoppage of baccarat. None but a descendant of a Knickerbocker is eligible for membership in that club, and the membership is of quiet, unassuming and pleasant gentlemen, a great many of them living on incomes.

The Union club is noted from the fact that its windows are always occupied by "starers" at the ladies, who consequently frequently go around the block to avoid the ordeal. Mr. Jacob Lorillard pronounced the occupants of these windows "old hens." The "young roosters" at the Lotos club over the way do not miss many opportunities of gazing at the passing throng. There are more dudes belonging to the Knickerbocker than to any other club, and the balcony is nightly ornamented by their presence.

One of the Great Speculators.

From the National Republican.

P. D. Armour is of sturdy Scotch Presbyterian stock. He was born in one of the central counties of New York, on a farm among the hills. It was the highest ambition of his boyhood days to earn money enough to buy the farm adjoining his father's. When the gold fever broke out he was still a mere stripling; but, full of youthful enthusiasm, he started for California, driving a wagon across the plains and mountains. He remained there three or four years, and in that time saved a few thousand dollars. He had cash enough to buy that farm and settle down. He had no sooner reached home than he experienced a sudden revulsion of feeling. The streets of the village looked narrow, cramped, and dull. The house appeared mean and dingy. He only remained on the farm two or three days, and then took himself to Cincinnati. Later he drifted to Milwaukee, and at the close of the war he sold a great lot of pork at $40 a barrel, and bought it in again at $18 to $19, realizing a profit of about a million. To-day he ranks as the wealthiest man in Chicago, being rated by those who know something of his business at $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. His transactions are colossal. His firm employs between 5,000 and 6,000 men, and on his pay rolls are about fifty men who receive salaries of $5,000 and over. He is not yet fifty-five years of age.

IMPORTANT WORK.

A Squatter Who Had Not Time to Talk to a Stranger.

From the Arkansaw Traveller.

A squatter may be far removed from the finer influences of civilization, but his marriage relations are far advanced. A minister while riding along a lonely road that gilded under tall bushes and wound around rugged hills, approached a man who stood at the gate of a rude house. The minister addressed a question to the man, but without replying, he turned toward the house, bowed to a woman who appeared in the doorway, and said:

"Good mornin' madam. How's your health an' the health of your family?" The woman did not reply. "Fine day, madam," continued the man, "only the sun's strikin' down mighty peart." Still the woman did not reply.

"My friend," said the minister, "I am to preach at Harvey's Point and I would like to know how to get there?"

"Don't you know?" asked the man.

"No sir, I do not."

"Then how do you expect me to know more about your business than you do. Say, there, madam," turning to the woman, "I'd like to come in and make myself at home. How's the propecks?"

The woman made no reply, but kicking a cat out of the way and "shooing" a chicken that came up on the steps, she leaned against the door, facing and regarding the man with a lack of interest that characterized the sweep of an eye over a barren waste.

"The church is situated near here, is it not?" asked the minister.

"Yes, but it is devilish nearer to some places than it is to here. Say, madam, I am very glad to see you, an' I hope that our relations may be pleasant." The woman made no reply.

"You seem to take great pleasure in being polite to the lady in the door. Who is she?"

"The boss."

"The boss of what?"

"The situation. She's my wife."

"Why do you stand out here bowing to her?"

"Mister, whar was you raised, anyhow? You don't know this country like I do. This mornin' I went outen this gate with a skillet follerin' me, an' I've got to do my courtin' over agin or it ain't safe to hang around the house. I've got to win that woman 'afore the sun goes down or I'll sleep in the woods. I ain't got no time to talk about churches and things about the next world, for this world needs coolin' off at present. Arter I win this woman, come aroun' an' I'll talk to you. How do you do, madam? Fine lot of chickens you've got. No, sir, my friend, I've got a big job before me, an' I ain't nigh got through. She's got a flat-iron back thar an' is apt to let drive at any minute. Go on away now, and let me make the fight. I'm mighty persuadin' in my natur'. Fine day, madam."

A Kangaroo Hunt in Vienna.

From the St. James' Gazette.

A novel pastime is in preparation for the Viennese public. Mr. Henry Burkhardt has brought from the colony of Victoria thirty kangaroos for the purpose of a royal hunt. The Prater is the locality selected, and dogs and horsemen will be engaged in the sport. Some of the kangaroos are of great height and proportionate strength, and will give the Austrian hounds that may be courageous enough to tackle them considerable trouble. The hunt is to come off in the course of a month.

LUNDBORG'S PERFUMES,
EDENIA AND MARECHAL NIEL ROSE.

FROM GREYSTONE.

Watterson's Last Bulletin Proving That Tilden is not a Candidate.

GREYSTONE, N. Y., June 25, 1883.

To the Editor of Life:

Mr. Tilden invited me to visit him a week ago to consult with me about a bullfrog nursery which he contemplates adding to his farm. Next to Stephen Dorsey and myself, I do not believe the country has produced a more zealous or enthusiastic farmer than is my life-long friend, whom I found awaiting me at the station. I had been led to expect that I would find him decrepit, palsied, tottering and feeble-minded. Judge of my agreeable surprise when I saw him—his cheeks rosy as a girl's, his eye clear, bright and quick, his muscles firm, elastic and knotted, his form erect and his mind sinewy and active as that of a cat on a hot stove. He grasped my hand and the squeeze was actually painful. To say that I was amazed would do my feelings but scant justice. I do not think, however, that Mr. Tilden has any political intentions.

It is two miles from the station to Greystone. The day was hot, and I hailed the presence of a hack at the station with delight. Mr. Tilden, however, refused to ride, and actually ran before the horses the entire distance, leaping fences and throwing somersaults over bushes with boyish abandon which delighted me. This shows how far removed from any political aspiration he is.

At Greystone a breakfast was served. I am careful in diet and partook sparingly of one or two dozen hard boiled eggs and a mince-pie, but Mr. Tilden declared that his appetite was equal to anything, and ate enormously of every dish from crab apple jelly to fried crow, of which last delicacy he is very fond. I am convinced that he takes no interest whatever in the coming campaign.

After breakfast I naturally desired to rest, but Mr. Tilden, with a silvery, light-hearted laugh, grasped up a pair of two hundred and fifty pound dumbbells and ran merrily up seventeen flights of stairs to the cupola, from which eminence he chuckled at my uncomfortable efforts to ascend. This convinces me he would never accept the nomination if it were tendered.

The cupola I found was Mr. Tilden's private gymnasium. If his tremendous vital energy finds no other outlet, it expends itself on Indian clubs, oozes out of the flying trapeze, and bubbles over the horizontal bar. Stripping to the waist, he playfully called my attention to his biceps. It measured thirty-nine inches. He picked up a thousand pound weight and trifled with it as easily as a boy with a base-ball. Pitching it to the ceiling in a graceful curve, he caught it nimbly on the back of his neck, and then went through all the tricks common to cannon-ball tossers. He then assured me that he was out of politics altogether.

At this moment a liveried servant brought up a card. It read: "John L. Sullivan, Boston."

"Ah! one of my dearest friends! Show him up," said Mr. Tilden, a rare twinkle agitating his left eye. Mr. Sullivan entered, and immediately stripped for a friendly contest with the sage. The servant and I provided ourselves with sponges and fans, and then called "Time." With a movement so quick that no eye could follow it, Mr. Tilden's left duke shot out, caught Mr. Sullivan on the brisket and sent him whirling to the extreme end of the room, where the well-trained servant immediately threw up the sponge. Medical attendance was then summoned, and in a few hours Mr. Sullivan regained consciousness and was pronounced out of immediate danger. Meanwhile Mr. Tilden convinced me that he had no intention whatever of allowing his name to be used in the coming campaign.

I now descended to the lawn by the staircase, while Mr. Tilden slid down the lightning rod and leaped lightly over the paling to join me. For several minutes he stood gazing southward as in pleasant contemplation. I asked him what he was looking at. Just then I heard a terrific bellow, and, turning, saw a large Durham bull pawing the earth not 100 yards away, maddened by the sight of my inflamed bandana, which I had left incautiously hanging out of my coat-tail pocket. Mr. Tilden waived me a courtly salutation and then, seeing I was somewhat averse to annoying the bull, he caught up that angered pet, twirled him lightly by the tail and swang him over the Hudson into New Jersey. I was then certain that no thought of public honors ever crossed his mind.

Editorial Enterprise.

From the Detroit Free Press.

One day a year or two ago a Greenville, S. C., editor heard that a man was to be lynched in a locality about fifteen miles away, and he put a new pencil into his pocket, hired the fastest horse in town and started for the scene. When he arrived he found a crowd under a tree, and in the circle was the prisoner—a villainous chap, who had committed a heinous offense. The crowd had started to hang him, but several citizens had advanced such arguments in favor of permitting the law to take its course that it had about been decided to take rascal back to jail. Williams drove up, jumped down, and in a minute or two learned that the affair was off. He had driven fifteen miles to report a case of lynching, and his disgust was profound. Mounting a stump, he began:

"Gentlemen, look at that thar' hoss. I've foundered him to get here and see this hanging. It will be $200 out of my pocket, and the only return will be a three-liner in the News, saying that you concluded not to hang. Gentlemen, has patriotism died out of this country?"

"No! no! no!" yelled the crowd.

"Does it make any particular difference to this man whether he is hung now or three months later?"

"No! no!"

"Gentlemen, I believe in law and order, but I've driven fifteen miles, foundered a hoss, and feel a bit broke up. I don't say that I want to see this man hung, and I don't say that lynching is the best plan, but if he should be swung up and I should be asked to sit on the coroner's jury and bring in a verdict of suicide, I don't see how I could refuse. Gentlemen, look at that ar' hoss!"

"Swing him up!" yelled twenty men.

"Look at that wreck of a once noble hoss and tell——"

"Hooray!" shouted the crowd, and up went the man to be left suspended until dead.

The Prince and the Prize.

From a London Dispatch.

London sporting society has been greatly scandalized ever since Mr. Peck won the Orange cup at Ascot. It is said that Mr. Peck felt so sorry to learn that the prince of Wales had lost heavily by betting against the winner that he tried to make amends for his own good luck by compensating his royal highness for his heavy losses in presenting the prince with the very valuable cup as a gift. To make matters worse it was alleged that the prince of Wales accepted the cup and had it sent home. The story became the talk of the town, and it became necessary for the prince's friends to make some explanation. This forthcame to-day, and it has been given out that although his royal highness does at present possess the cup won on the turf by another man and a rival in the successful race, he did not obtain it as a gift, but paid for it with £600 hard cash. This explanation has made matters much worse, and there is some talk of having both Mr. Peck and the prince disciplined according to turf ethics for dealing in prizes. The prince's friends claim that the cup was at first offered to him as a gift, and that he indignantly declined it, but that, finding that Mr. Peck was bent on securing some royal recognition in exchange for the prize, accepted it finally for the purpose of preventing it reaching a market, and subsequently sent Mr. Peck a check for £600. The fact that Mr. Peck got the check cashed is pointed to as a proof that the prince of Wales properly measured the winner of the cup.

ONE KIND OF BOY.

The Youth Who Does Not Run Away to be a Pirate King.

Bill Nye in Detroit Free Press.

I am always sorry to see a youth get irritated and pack up his clothes, in the heat of debate, and leave the home-nest. His future is a little doubtful, and it is hard to prognosticate whether he will fracture limestone for the streets of a great city or become president of the United States, but there is a beautiful and luminous life ahead of him in comparison with that of the boy who obstinately refuses to leave the home-nest.

The boy who cannot summon the moral conrage some day to uncoil the tendrils of his heart from the clustering idols of the household, to grapple with outrageous fortune, ought to be taken by the ear and led away out into the great untried realm of space.

While the great world throbs on, he sighs and refuses to throb. While other young men put on their seal-brown overalls and wrench the laurel wreath and other vegetables from cruel fate, the youth who dangles near the old nest, and eats the hard-earned groceries of his father, shivers on the brink of life's great current and sheds the scalding tear.

He is the young-man-afraid-of-the-sawbuck, the human being with the unlaundried spinal column. The only vital question that may be said to agitate his pseudo brain is whether he shall marry and bring his wife to the home-nest or marry and tear loose from his parents to live with his father-in-law. Finally he settles it and compromises by living alternately with each.

How the old folks yearn to see him! How their aged eyes light up when he comes with his growing family to devour everything in sight and yawn through the space between meals. This is the hey-day of his life; the high noon of the boy who never ventured to ride the yearling colt, or to be yanked through the shimmering sunlight at the tail of a two-year-old. He never dared to have any fun because he might bump his nose and make it bleed on his clean clothes. He never surreptitiously cut the copper wire off the lightning rod to snare suckers with, and he never went in swimming because the great, rude boys might duck him or paint him with mud. He shunned the green apple of boyhood and did not slide down hill because he would have to pull his sled back to the top again.

Now he borrows other people's newspapers, eats the provisions of others, and sits on the counter of the grocery till the proprietor calls him a counter irritant.

There can be nothing more un-American than this flabby polyp, this one-horse tadpole that never becomes a frog. The average American would rather burst up in business six times in four years, and settle for nine cents on the dollar than to lead such a life. He would rather be an active bankrupt than a weak and bilious barnacle on the clam-shell of home.

The true American would rather work himself into luxury or the lunatic asylum than to hang like a great wart upon the face of nature. This young man is not in accordance with the Yankee schedule, and yet I do not want to say that he belongs to any other nation. Foreign powers may have been wrong; trans-Atlantic nations may have erred, and the system of European government may have been erroneous, but I would not come out and charge them with this horrible responsibility. They never harmed me, and I will not tarnish their fair fame with this grave indictment.

He will breathe a certain amount of atmosphere, and absorb a given amount of feed for a few years, and then the full-grown biped will leave the home-nest at last. The undertaker will come and get him and take what there is left of him out to the cemetery. That will be all. There can be no deep abiding sorrow for him here; public buildings will not be draped in mourning, and you can get your mail at the usual hours when he dies. The band will not play a sadder strain because the fag end of a human failure has tapered down to death, and the soft and shapeless features are still. You will have no trouble getting a draft cashed on that day, and the giddy throng will join the picnic as they had made arrangements to do.

Some Big Melons.

From the Detroit Free Press.

I was talking with an old planter in the Arkansas bottoms about watermelons, and he threw away his "chaw" and remarked:

"Wall, I dunno. I was into watermellyons four seasons, and I lost money."

"Didn't you have good crops?"

"Right thar was the trouble, sir," he replied. "The fust year I kinder let the niggers run the business, and I'll be chawed, sir, if six or eight of 'em didn't break their backs lifting them ar' mellyons into carts to tote 'em to the landing. I've got six cripples for life to take car' of on account of that crop."

"And the second year?"

"Well, I run the patch myself the second year. I thought I'd see what old Crittenden county could do when she had a fair show, and the result was purty nigh what you call a calamity. I picked out a thousand mellyons for shipment to Cairo, and it took six niggers and a span of mules to git each one down to the landing. I had 'em all sot up in a row, ready for the steamer, when along cum a lot of refugee niggers from the bottom lands and squatted on me."

"How?"

"Why, every head of family pre-empted one o' them big mellyons for a cabin and went to keeping house on the inside of it as grand as you please."

"You don't tell me!"

"And to show the ingratitude of the race let me tell you that they took the seeds and dumped 'em into the river right thar' and started a sand-bar which obleeges the boats to land three miles further down the river. I reckon thar' might be money in mellyons if you could git 'em up north, but you can't stand around with a shot-gun and tell a nigger who has bin overflowed out that he can't come the cabin dodge on you. You see, it's kinder human natur' to feel sorry for 'em."

A Big Yield of Potatoes.

From the San Luis Obispo (Cal.) Tribune.

About 1855 or 1856 a man by the name of Parker, who lived on the Mokelumne river, in San Joaquin county, made oath before the commissioners of the San Joaquin agricultural society that he had raised 2,500 bushels of potatoes on an acre. The story was so astonishing that a committee was appointed to investigate it. They reported that the ground was planted as usual in the spring, and matured a large crop of potatoes; that before the potatoes were dug the June rise of the river sent the water near to the surface, producing a second crop on the surface, the ground being nearly covered with the potatoes. When the water went down, a month or two later, a third crop set in and matured below the first. The committee dug several hills, which produced from seventy-five to eighty-seven pounds each. The top potatoes were sunburned and worthless for the table; the first crop was, of course, worthless, and but a small quantity of the lower or third crop was good. The digging and weighing of the potatoes were not very carefully done. A close estimate would probably have reduced the figures considerably, but no one who examined the field placed the yield at less than 1,200 bushels to the acre. The ground was utterly exhausted, producing nothing for some years after.

BLACK AND WHITE VALETS.

Men Who Never See a Hero in Those They Serve.

From the New York World.

The colored body servant of the southern planter in ante-bellum time has passed away, even in the southern states, and the emancipated slave, partly because his impoverished ex-master can no longer afford to employ him, and partly because he wishes to be in a more lucrative employment, is a barber or tailor in his native locality, or is a waiter in some northern hotel or household.

There is a great difference, however, between the colored body servant and the valet from abroad, though their confidential relations with their masters are about the same. It was well said that no man is a hero to his valet, who, better than himself, knows all his shortcomings and foibles; and as honesty and sound judgment are the principal prerequisites of a valet, these are possessed in as high a degree by the untutored, uncouth, dusky serving-man in the south as by the refined and educated Frenchman or Swede who comes from abroad.

The valet somehow has not become a popular adoption in this country, and is one of the few foreign customs which extended travel has not imported. Not one of our millionaire kings and princes employ a valet. Secretaries and amanuenses they may employ; but only a few young men about town, like James Gordon Bennett, Wright Sanford, Frank Lord, Rutherford, or such men have valets. Mr. Vanderbilt spoken to on the subject the other day at the Gentleman's Driving association, replied:

"Oh, a valet would be in my way. I don't want any one bothering about me as long as I can help myself."

Mr. Gould declared "a valet would be in his way half the time." Mr. C. P. Huntington bluntly said he would convert a valet into a messenger boy before he had been with him half an hour, if one should be sent to him as a joke. Saturday D. O. Mills meekly said: "I do not want any valet. I can look after my own clothes and things." The late Colonel Fisk employed as a valet one Barton, a barber, who, however, was merely a private interpreter for him, after shaving him in the morning.

The American characteristics are too active, independent, self-reliant to submit to the impositions and extortions of a valet. The accommodations of American hotels and houses are too general and liberal for a valet to be of much service here. The servants here incidentally perform half the duties of a valet. A valet is indispensable on the continent. Mr. Mackey, the California millionaire, employs a valet while he is over in Europe; brings him back when he comes, dismissing him and starting him in business here. Retired valets in Europe go to keeping cabarets and lodging-houses. Here they open barber shops, news-stands or suburban saloons. Barton, Fiske's former valet, threw down the razor to grasp the carving-knife, and now keeps a restaurant. Pierre, the valet of the late Gov. Beach Lawrence, has opened a gentleman's furnishing goods store on Sixth avenue. Many elderly and invalid gentlemen have valets. Ex-Gov. Tilden has an English valet who has been with him for years.

The old-body servant was a jolly, easy-going soul, but the imported valet always has an eye to the future, and levies constant toll on his employer's pockets and wardrobe, claiming that it is necessary for a valet to emulate in his expenditures and dress his master. Even foreigners visiting us find valets not so serviceable as on the continent, because of the accommodations of our hotels and the efficiency of the attendants; and the youthful Duc de Morny, who was recently over here, sent his valet back to Paris soon after his arrival in this city.

Gresham Too Inquisitive.

From the New York Times (Rep.)

Postmaster General Gresham has failed, thus far, to please his first assistant, who declares that he is "too inquisitive." With such a person as Mr. Frank Hatton in the department, the postmaster general cannot be too inquisitive, too vigilant, or too firm in insisting upon being the actual and not merely the nominal head of the postal service. Mr. Gresham is doubtless familiar with the official history of the easy-going, unsuspicious Mr. Key, his predecessor.

GASTRONOMIC.

A vegetarian diet is recommended during hot weather by those who have tried it.

Very large strawberries are said to be destitute of flavor and only suitable for short cake.

Soft-shell crabs, cucumbers and lemon pie now assist medical men in accumulating money.

Horse-flesh pie is a well-known dish in Paris. Those who partake of it say it is a palatable dish.

Cold beets with mayonnaise dressing are delicious for breakfast, according to a Philadelphia paper.

The prince of Wales recently gave a fish dinner, at which soles, mullets, salmon, pike, perch, crabs and whitebait were served.

Game now available for dinner parties includes plover, tame and wild pigeons, squab, snipe, guinea hens and home ducks. Ere long the assortment and variety will be greater.

Champagne cake is something new and is said to have been invented for the watering place season. No one knows of what it is made, but the taste of champagne is unmistakable.

They tell of a Brooklyn statesman, who, ordering Charlotte russe, blew the froth off the top of it, and then, when asked to explain why he did so, said he thought it was a new kind of beer.

At the dinner of the graduating class of West Point cadets at Delmonico's the other evening the ornamental pieces were typical of war and its uses and illustrative of camp scenes in the life of a cadet.

One swallow does not make a summer, nor does a bowl of colored and seasoned hot water make a consomme soup. There is enough liquid trash of that name continually served to float the Great Eastern.

Barbecued salmon with Maderia sauce is a fine and seasonable dish about this time, but it wants to be prepared by a cook who knows what he is about. Salmon can be ruined in cooking, like everything else.

The Boston Transcript says that mint sauce will keep if bottled, and be as good, or even better, than when freshly gathered, for a week or ten days at least. There are few cooks who will agree with the Boston paper.
